

— RAPP & ESEN · BRAND PLATFORM · V1.0

Express different.

The identity of the maison founded by Françoise Rapp and Anna Esen, collapsed out of two working sessions under The Collapse, the method used at Quantum Branding. The line above is not a proposal. It was said in the room on 17 September, and this document is the working out of it.

PREPARED FOR

Françoise Rapp
Anna Esen

METHOD

The Collapse
BrandOS

MATERIAL

17 & 18 September 2026
262 minutes

STATUS

Platform drafted
Name settled

Nothing here was invented. All of it was said.

Two sessions, nine exercises and a forced choice produced enough material that this platform could be assembled almost entirely from quotation. Where a page reasons beyond what was said, it prints the reasoning so you can refuse it.

What this is

The brand platform. The part that stops moving. Reason for being, beliefs, promise, positioning, the five values, voice, the visual system, the object, and the frame the offer sits inside.

It is written to be argued with. Nizzar said on the first day that the brand already existed and that it had to come from the two of you rather than from him. This document is what came out.

Three kinds of statement

SETTLED	Said in a session and agreed. It is quoted, with a time code.
DERIVED	Follows from what was said, by an argument printed on the page. Challenge the argument.
PROPOSED	Marked PROPOSAL . Yours to accept or replace.

Time codes. S1 00:00:00 is the session of 17 September, 166 minutes. S2 00:00:00 is 18 September, 96 minutes. Every quotation in this document can be found at its mark.

What changed between the two days

The first session worked on brands and people, and produced the temperament. The second worked on the anatomy, and produced the words. They agree almost everywhere, and the two places they do not are the most useful pages in Section I.

- 01 Disney. Refused outright on 17 September, chosen as an archetype on 18 September. page 08 holds the contradiction, and it is the single most important risk this house carries.
- 02 Wealthy. Proposed and agreed for about ninety seconds on 18 September, then taken apart and dropped. It is not a client criterion. page 17.

One reading rule, from the first day

The impact is the aftermath. You never sell the aftermath. You sell the truth.

NIZZAR BEN CHEKROUNE • S1 01:01:26

That sentence governs every page after it. Whenever this document seems to withhold something obviously attractive, which happens on the club, on the giving back and on the whole of Section III, it is this rule doing the work.

What is inside this document.

I · The method and the material

The Collapse	page 04
The material, two sessions	page 05
S1 · The four brands they stand with	page 06
S1 · What was extracted	page 07
S1 · The four brands they refuse	page 08
S1 · Eight pairs of people	page 09
S1 · Defiant without movement	page 10
S1 · The doctrine, and the enemy	page 11
S2 · The board of twelve	page 12
S2 · What they chose	page 13
S2 · Explorer against Creator	page 14
S2 · The culture, five words	page 15
S2 · The four words refused	page 16
S2 · The client, five words	page 17
S2 · Voice, aesthetics, value	page 18
The joker, and the convergence	page 19

II · The platform

Manifesto	page 20
Reason for being, mission, vision	page 21
Seven beliefs, and what each costs	page 22
Essence, promise, positioning	page 23
The arc, and the axis	page 24
The archetype blend	page 25
The five values as behaviour	page 26 · page 27
The anti-brand · fume, not perfume	page 28
Always, never	page 29
The four doors	page 30
The one-formula rule	page 31
The club, and the giving back	page 32

III · The expression

Voice · the four anchors	page 33
Voice · mechanics and lexicon	page 34
Voice · before and after	page 35
Visual · the five principles	page 36
Visual · the triangle	page 37
Visual · the palette	page 38
Visual · typography	page 39
Visual · the ripple	page 40
Visual · the object	page 41
Visual · image and the forbidden	page 42
The house accord	page 43
The formula card	page 44
The audio message	page 45

IV · The name

Rapp & Esen, and what it already decided	page 46
The lockup and the mark	page 47
What else needs naming	page 48

V · Into service

The commission	page 49
The lighter line	page 50
What this house measures	page 51
Ninety days	page 52
Appendix · the verbatims	page 53
The decisions that remain	page 54

The four lines to keep

If nothing else survives, these four should. Each is verbatim.

Truth always wins in a magical way. Anna, S1 02:15:51

You never sell the aftermath. You sell the truth. Nizzar, S1 01:01:26

It is fume rather than perfume. Nizzar, S1 02:09:43

We are not building something beautiful. It will be beautiful by design. Anna, S1 02:36:01

The Collapse. Observe, Collapse, Build, Hold.

A brand is not decided. It is collapsed out of what the founders already carry, by putting them under enough pressure that only the load-bearing answers survive. Nizzar stated the premise before the first exercise, and it is the reason the material is usable.

The brand is going to reveal itself to us through this exercise. The brand already exists. It is already there. I can see it, I have the name already. I can see everything, but I can't tell you. Because if I tell you, then it becomes frictionable, and at some point you will start questioning things. So it needs to come from you.

NIZZAR BEN CHEKROUNE, TO FRANÇOISE • S1 00:27:54

01

Observe

Gather without editing. Exercises rather than interviews, so the answers are defended rather than recited.

17 and 18 September.
Nine exercises.

02

Collapse

Force the field into one state. Contradictions resolved out loud, words refused out loud, and what is left is the brand.

This document.

03

Build

Mark, label, card, object, site, service design, the commercial frame. Nothing is built before the platform is signed.

Next.

04

Hold

The brand kept honest against this document, quarter by quarter, as the house grows and the temptation to widen arrives.

From the first commission.

Why the exercises were shaped this way

The test is alignment, never taste. It was stated twice, once on each day, because it is the rule the exercise lives or dies on.

Our goal is alignment. If there is a misalignment between who you are and what you bring to the world, we have a problem.

NIZZAR BEN CHEKROUNE • S1 00:39:00

The escalation across the two days was deliberate. Session one was open and conversational. Session two dictated the terms: a fixed board, five slots, and a forced choice at the end. That moves the founders from stating opinions to defending them, and the defences are where this document comes from.

One adaptation, made live. Nizzar had never run this process with two founders. S1 00:34:14 The design changed in the room: each founder gives two brands she stands with and two she refuses, so that divergence is produced rather than avoided.

The test for everything that follows

Nizzar named it on the first day and it is the most practical thing in the method.

If a friend proposes doing it in yellow, you do not have to explain why not. You simply know.

A platform that still requires an argument in eighteen months has failed. One that produces an instant, wordless no has worked.

Two sessions. Two hundred and sixty-two minutes.

This is the whole evidence base, and it is unusually rich for Phase 01. Two founders, nine exercises, and a closing round where each list was collapsed to a single word.

SESSION	EXERCISE	WHAT IT PRODUCED
17 Sept 166 min	01 · Brands you stand with	Cartier, Hermès, Apple, Patagonia. The temperament: discreet, independent, handcrafted, never discounted, recognised.
	02 · Brands you refuse	Disney, McDonald's, Nestlé, Microsoft. One word underneath all four, and a mirror the house has to live with.
	03 · Eight pairs of people	The posture, confirmed three separate times, and the arc from self to world.
18 Sept 96 min	04 · Brand DNA, twelve archetypes	Magician and Lover agreed independently. Explorer against Creator.
	05 · The culture	Five words, four more argued and thrown out.
	06 · The client	Five words. One of them survived being refused twice.
	07 · Tone of voice	How others would describe the house. Five words.
	08 · Look and feel	Five words, plus the positioning triangle.
	09 · Value proposition	What a client feels afterwards. Five words.
The joker	One word per list	Nizzar forced a single choice from each of the last five. page 19 .

NOTE the name Rapp & Esen predates this work and is used throughout both recordings. Section IV does not propose alternatives.

Who was in the room

Françoise Rapp. The nose. Natural materials, named producers, botany. Independence, heritage, artisan work. Supplied every concrete fact about how the product is made, and the refusal of the fake promise.

Anna Esen. The expansion, the client relationship, the club. Her own sense of smell is the origin of the business. Supplied the ambition and every refusal that mattered.

Nizzar Ben Chekroune. Quantum Branding. Ran The Collapse, made four rulings, and named the enemy.

Where the business actually came from

Anna has an unusually acute nose and learned, at five years old, to close it with internal muscles on a long car journey to Ukraine. She still can. S1 00:56:16

She carried the idea for two years, writing it down over and over, before she found Françoise. That is the founding fact of this house and it belongs on the record.

The moment I start feeling that I don't like how someone smells, I know this person is not anymore for me.

ANNA ESEN • S1 00:56:16

Four brands. Chosen on instinct, defended on values.

The instruction was to answer instinctively and then justify. What came back is a coherent picture of a house that is discreet, independent, made by hand, never discounted, and interested in being recognised rather than in being seen.

Françoise • 01

Cartier

"Sophistication and the slow luxury. And the elegance. Without being bling bling. A very discreet, high luxury and high quality, but at the same time it stays, it is subdued. Everything is really in the materials, not in being extravaganza, like Gucci for example." S1 00:37:08

Pushed on it. Nizzar: discreet, elegant, not extravagant. Françoise: something which is too extravagant is not really a synonym of quality. Then she conceded the exception that matters: a pinch of extravagance is permitted.

Françoise • 02 • also chosen by Anna

Hermès

"Really artisan work, with a heritage. And they are an independent house. They keep their independence. One of the last high luxury brands in France that didn't sell to Bernard Arnault. So it doesn't belong to a group." S1 00:39:43

Nizzar compressed it to two words: independence, handcraft.

She also praised the opposite quality: the windows, the new scarf prints, the modern Hermès taken out of the box. "It is kind of extravaganza, but it is very chic and good taste." That sentence is where the word chic first enters the record, a day before it wins the aesthetics exercise.

Anna • 01

Hermès, differently

Not the whole brand. One part of it. "In order to come to the most exclusive part of the brand, you have to experience the rest. To become part of the Hermès family, to come on the waiting list, to be invited." She dislikes being made to buy her way onto that list.

"What I like is not making any discounts. The price is set and the price is always rising." Françoise: it is never discounted. S1 00:46:05

And timelessness: "you can wear it thirty years ago and a hundred years in the future. No matter who I am, no matter what I am wearing, it is always a perfect fit."

Anna • 02

Apple

The 1997 rebrand. "Shifting from selling the product to selling the experience. From we made the best phones with an amazing camera, to what the product does for you. This product is not about the product. It is about you, how you use it for who you want to be." S1 00:53:17

Nizzar added the Jobs pricing story: a saturated market, beauty as the reason to enter it, and a decision to double the price rather than undercut. "That is the story that sold itself. But the story is fully aligned with the person that he was."

The third one

Françoise hesitated over a third and named Patagonia, for buying and protecting eight thousand hectares alongside Native American communities. S1 00:41:20

Nizzar: "what you like is the societal or human values." Françoise: Exactly. Protection.

Patagonia returns the next day, on the archetype board, and Françoise chooses it again. page 13.

The sentence that produced the value proposition

Nizzar read Anna's Hermès answer back to her, and in doing so wrote the last line of Section II a day before the exercise that produced it.

What you like is the unicity, and the fact that you are seen by the brand. So the brand sees you. It is not you who sees the brand. It is the brand who sees you and says, I recognize you. And now you are part of the family.

NIZZAR BEN CHEKROUNE • S1 00:47:11

Twenty-four hours later, asked what a client feels afterwards, Françoise said recognized and Anna said she had goosebumps. page 18.

What the four brands actually said.

Four brands, eleven attributes, and one tension that had to be resolved before anything else could be built. Nizzar spotted the tension inside ten minutes and named it as work to be done.

Kept, without argument

- Discreet. Not bling. Subdued.
- Independent. Belonging to no group.
- Handcrafted. With a heritage.
- In the materials. Quality located in what it is made of, not in how loud it is.
- Never discounted. The price is set, and it rises.
- Timeless. Thirty years back, a hundred forward.
- Not about the product. About the person using it.
- Recognised. The brand sees you, not the other way round.

Kept, with a condition

A pinch of extravagance. Françoise refused extravagance as a value and then admitted she has some. Nizzar: you are not too extravagant at all, but you have a pinch of extravaganza.

S1 00:39:12

The condition is Hermès's own: the extravagance goes into the windows and the scarves, never into the object itself. In this house that means the accord can be strange. The bottle cannot.

Refused inside the answer

Buying your way in. Anna likes the Hermès waiting list and dislikes being made to purchase her way onto it. That distinction becomes a rule on page 32.

The tension, named on day one

Anna wants forever, and she also wants the next one. She said both within four minutes: the Hermès bag that fits for a hundred years, and the iPhone you upgrade to because you have shifted.

The fact that it is forever, but it still changes, that quantum ambivalence is something we will have to work on. Otherwise there is no alignment. You cannot have as a value forever and also a movement.

S1 00:48:24

It was left open on the first day. It is resolved on page 31, and the resolution is the commercial engine of the house.

Not for everybody, settled out loud

Nizzar put the hardest question of the first session to Françoise directly, because he had read her correctly: she is the founder most likely to flinch from exclusivity.

Are you one hundred per cent aligned with the not for everybody narrative? I am asking because you as a person have this problem.

NIZZAR BEN CHEKROUNE • S1 00:50:40

Françoise: Yes. I align with that. I know that the creations won't align with everybody. And then the closing of it, which is the sentence the house should keep for the day a journalist calls it elitist:

You are not for everybody. And it is exactly the same for the perfume. It does not mean that we do not like the others. It does not mean we do not have respect for the others. It only means that we are not for everybody.

NIZZAR BEN CHEKROUNE • S1 00:51:58

The countervailing force

Anna holds the opposite pole, and the platform needs both. She refuses to make anyone feel second class.

I love luxury and eliteness, but in a way that I don't want others to feel excluded. It just needs to be a choice whether you want to be there or not, not to feel excluded like a second class. S1 01:29:50

Held together: the house is not for everybody, and it never tells anybody they are not enough. Those are compatible. Most houses at this price manage only the first. page 50 is where the second is paid for.

THIS PAGE SETTLES the temperament, and opens the forever-against-movement tension.

Four refusals, one word underneath.

Nizzar called this the easiest exercise. It was not. It produced the sharpest reading of the session, and a mirror the house will be looking into for the rest of its life.

Françoise

Disney

"They tell fairy tales. So it is fake. A fake land, to get business and to get something out of you. It is just entertainment, and it should not be rooted in our societal thinking as it is today."

Françoise

McDonald's

"They make crap and they damage our generation by making them feel it is cool. They have great marketing, because it works. It is good business and it is bad business, in terms of value."

Anna

Nestlé

The infant formula in Africa, and the water. "It is the opposite of caring. The opposite of integrity. They are not acting to the level of responsibility they have, with the position they stand in."

Anna

Microsoft

"Instability, crushing, observing. No trust." And the philanthropy: "communicating as if they are doing a lot for the world, but behind the scenes you know they are lying, and not everyone sees it."

The word underneath all four

Nizzar did not accept the four answers as four answers. He compressed them, and the compression is the most useful line in the exercise.

I do not like the manipulation behind it. What I hear you say is I care. From Patagonia to McDonald's, what I hear you say is I care.

NIZZAR BEN CHEKROUNE, TO FRANÇOISE • S1 01:19:59

He told the story behind it: a man asked why he should care about a campaign for children, and was found so offensive that the collaboration ended. That is not even a question to ask.

And then Anna turned it into a client test, six minutes later, without either of them noticing they had built it together.

Our ideal clients are the ones that have already done so much inner work. They know that when they are on this negotiation table, they will never ask the question, why do you care?

ANNA ESEN • S1 01:25:41

That is the fastest qualification test this house will ever have, and it costs nothing to run. It reappears as a door rule on page 30.

The mirror

The Disney problem

Françoise refused Disney for selling fairy tales. Nizzar immediately turned it around, and this is the single most important risk in the document.

If I were someone who does not believe in the esoteric, I would say exactly the same about the brand we are building. They are selling fairy tales. It is a fake promise. It is only business.

S1 01:17:10

And, at S1 01:07:05: people are going to say those guys are new crooks, new witches trying to sell us some perfume.

The two answers, both kept

Françoise's. It is not the kind of people, they are not our clients. Nizzar: I did not say we do not want them. You said it.

The structural one. The house never sells the effect. That is what makes it not-Disney, and it is the whole of page 11.

Note the contradiction across the two days. On 18 September, Françoise chose Disney as the Magician archetype she aligns with, and Anna defended its inspirational half. The house is one sentence away from being read as Disney. That sentence is the difference between selling the truth and selling the aftermath.

THIS PAGE SETTLES that the refusals all reduce to I care, and names the house's central perception risk.

Eight pairs. No abstentions allowed.

Two people at a time, choose one, say why. Where both founders land on the same person the signal is strong. They did it five times out of eight, and the five agreements describe one person.

GANDHI • MALCOLM X Malcolm X Françoise: it corresponds to my rebellious and my fighting mood. Anna had chosen Gandhi previously and moved. split, then converged	ZUCKERBERG • MUSK split Françoise took Zuckerberg only for having built a place to connect. Anna took Musk, for disrupting banking and oil. the only real split	DIANA • ELIZABETH Lady Diana She did not let the environment break her essence. She transformed a position into something good. Françoise • Anna	JACKIE • MARILYN split Françoise: Marilyn, for what she transcended. Anna: Jackie, for the silent, anchored elegance and the grace. two halves of one word
THATCHER • BHUTTO Benazir Bhutto Both refused Thatcher on rigidity. Bhutto: strength and peace, dignity, depth, a soft gaze. Françoise • Anna	PICASSO • FRIDA KAHLO Frida Kahlo Her art came from within, from the guts. She made her own style, and what you see is her truth. Françoise • Anna	ALI • JORDAN Muhammad Ali Resilience, big heart, and a poet. Silently knowing his value. I do not need to prove to you who I am. Françoise • Anna	MADONNA • MICHAEL JACKSON Madonna She transcended her class, had a vision of herself, reinvented for every album, and never lost herself. Françoise • Anna

What the five agreements have in common

Diana, Bhutto, Frida, Ali, Madonna. Five people, no overlap in field, and one shape: each of them was placed inside a structure that wanted to define them, and each came out of it more themselves rather than less. Diana inside the monarchy. Bhutto inside a rigid politics. Frida inside pain. Ali inside a sport that expected silence. Madonna inside an industry that reinvents people by force.

That is not a list of role models. It is a definition of the product. A composed perfume is worn inside rooms that want to define you, and it is supposed to do exactly what those five did.

And the two splits agree too. Marilyn and Jackie are the same word arrived at from opposite ends: what she transcended, and how she carried it. Zuckerberg and Musk was a choice between two people neither founder admires, and both answers were about what got built rather than about the builder.

S1 02:01:00

The moment the brand spoke

Anna and Françoise were describing Lady Diana. Anna reached for the rose, and said she could stay over one and smell it for hours without getting bored. Nizzar stopped them.

Can you hear the brand talking through you now?

Françoise: Essence? Rose? Anna: Forever? Can you hear the words coming? Françoise: Yes. Without you even noticing that you are talking about it.

Three words fell out of a conversation about a dead princess: essence, rose, forever. All three are load-bearing in Section II.

And the direction, thirty seconds later

Nizzar connected it to the Apple answer from earlier in the session.

Express different.

Set in the house display face. S1 02:01:28. It is on the cover of this document for a reason.

Defiant without movement.

The same posture arrived three separate times, from three unrelated images, across forty-five minutes. Nobody was trying to produce it. When a thing appears three times without being asked for, it is not a preference. It is the temperament.

S1 01:46:48 • all three

The black panther

Anna: Black Panther is my animal.

Nizzar, immediately: Black Panther is the energy of my business.

Françoise, three minutes later: since I was young I wanted to have a Black Panther at home. I wanted the wild one, the big one.

Why it. "They are absolutely still.

They sleep and they relax, but the moment they need to act, it is from zero to a hundred, absolute fast, with awareness of everything around them." Nizzar: and the moment after, they walk as calm and as gracious as they want to be.

S1 02:32:04

Muhammad Ali

Françoise, reading the photograph: he is here like, you want to challenge me? Nizzar: okay, I am waiting. Silently knowing his value. I do not need to prove to you who I am. I know who I am.

Anna named it in one phrase, and the phrase is the heading of this page.

Nizzar: I dare you. Calm, but not aggressively. There is no aggressiveness in it. It is more that if you come, you had better know that something is waiting for you.

S1 02:11:13

Benazir Bhutto

Set against Thatcher, whom both founders refused. Nizzar on Thatcher: I see agenda, I see mission, and nothing is going to go in front of me that I am not going to break.

Françoise on Bhutto: I see something that says, it is going to happen anyways. Nizzar: whether you like it or not, it is going to happen.

Françoise closed it: this is a different posture. One is egocentric with power. The other is exactly like the veil she is wearing. It is movement. It is happening. And then: and it is coherent with the perfume.

The fourth appearance, which is the same shape in time

Françoise chose Malcolm X for her rebellious and fighting mood. Nizzar told the whole arc rather than the famous half: the rage, the years being used as the public face of change-by-destruction, the break, Mecca, and the rebirth into non-violence.

Anna heard it as a description of the founders: we have this rebellious understanding that the world needs to change. But changing something does not need to go through violence. We can have this inner rage sometimes, fire, but we can learn to channel it in a way that is not disruptive. S1 01:44:27

Twenty-four hours later, without either founder referring back to it, Anna refused the word revolutionary for the client and took change agent instead, for exactly this reason: revolutionary is like, I fight it. Change agent can go with the peaceful energy. S2 01:09:20

Two days, two exercises, one answer. Rebellion that has been transmuted rather than suppressed. That is the house.

What this rules out immediately

NO Any communication that pushes, chases, urgent-messages or counts down. The panther does not chase.

NO Any claim made louder because it is not being believed.

NO Any defence of the price. We are expensive, we are.

S1 01:32:27

NO Any fight with a competitor, a critic or a category. It is going to happen anyway.

The posture is also the media strategy, the pricing behaviour and the crisis protocol. Three pages in Section II are derived from this one.

THIS PAGE SETTLES the temperament: still, certain, unhurried, and impossible to provoke.

You never sell the aftermath. You sell the truth.

This is the most consequential thing said across both days. It is a commercial doctrine, not a moral one, and it governs the website, the club, the giving back, the second line and every sentence in Section III.

The impact is the end result, is the aftermath. You never sell the aftermath. You sell the truth. The truth, something nobody can deny, is whether you like your perfume or you don't.

NIZZAR BEN CHEKROUNE • S1 01:01:26

The chain he built from it, in one breath. If I feel good with my perfume, I feel good with myself. The moment I feel good with myself, I am being respected. I might not be liked or loved, but I am being respected, because people can see me standing still.

And the reason it is commercial rather than pious:

If we sell the impact, we become sellers. People think we are selling something to them. When we talk about the truth of what it is, the impact is going to come anyway, and they will always align with what we say.

NIZZAR BEN CHEKROUNE • S1 01:03:01

What it costs. Everything that is easy to say. The house may not write that its perfume attracts love, opens a frequency or changes a room. All of those may be true for a given client. None may be sold. Françoise had already refused them on her own grounds: I don't want to make fake promises, because there are so many parameters. S1 01:07:19

S1 01:05:18

The enemy, named

Nizzar rejected the obvious diagnosis and produced a better one. Not the fear of missing out, which everybody already sells against.

The syndrome of being left behind.

The world is moving and I am left behind. Technology is advancing and I am left behind. It is deeper, it is even more vicious, because it is not a fear. It is a syndrome.

Françoise: it means it is systemic. And when it is used commercially, if you don't buy that, you are not going to belong to that system or class, so you feel left behind.

The two problems, solved at once

Nizzar set the brief at S1 01:06:09: the presentation of the house has to solve the left-behind syndrome and answer who you are when you wear it, in the same move.

It does, and the mechanism is the doctrine above. A house that sells only the truth cannot make anyone feel behind, because there is no race in the proposition. There is a person, a reading and a bottle.

The same rule, applied to the giving back

Anna raised two perfumes to be co-created with indigenous communities in the Amazon, using local materials, with a return to those communities. S1 01:12:44 Nizzar accepted the project and refused the communication in the same sentence.

What the right hand gives, the left hand does not know. It means you do not scream it out loud. You do not say it. If we give back, people will say it.

NIZZAR BEN CHEKROUNE • S1 01:13:09

Anna arrived at the operative distinction herself: the story is not we give back, which nobody believes. The story is co-created, which is a fact about how the thing was made rather than a claim about the maker.

And the footnote, which belongs in a strategy document and nowhere else. Nizzar: Patagonia made sure that you know about it. That is the trick. The house briefs, and lets others write it.

The test, for any sentence the house writes

Cover the effect with your hand. Is anything left?

- Truth. Nineteen materials. Iris dried four years. Composed on a date. Signed.
- Aftermath. You will feel recognised. You will walk differently into a room. You will attract the right people.

The second column is all true, and it is what the client will say afterwards. That is precisely why the house must not say it first.

THIS PAGE SETTLES the communication doctrine, and the rule on giving back.

Twelve archetypes. Pick on values, not on taste.

A fixed board, three picks each, and one rule stated before anything was shown. You were not asked which brands you like. You were asked which brands stand where you stand. Disney tested that rule within ninety seconds, and it held.

HERO Nike Courage, perseverance, obstacles overcome. Anna • shortlisted	REBEL Harley-Davidson The status quo, challenged. Freedom, non-conformists.	MAGICIAN Disney Transformation, wonder, escape. Refused outright the day before. Françoise • Anna	EXPLORER Patagonia Discovery, authenticity, the thirst for the unknown. Françoise
SAGE TEDx Wisdom, truth, the trusted mentor.	INNOCENT Dove Simplicity, optimism, purity.	EVERYMAN IKEA Belonging, accessibility, the everyday.	JESTER Old Spice Humour, playfulness, irreverence.
LOVER Gucci "Quality is remembered long after price is forgotten." Desire, intimacy. Françoise • Anna	CAREGIVER not recorded Nurture, protection, service. The brand name is not legible in the recording.	CREATOR Lego Invention, imagination, self-expression. Anna	RULER Microsoft Control, leadership, stability, order, legacy. Anna • refused

The rule that made it work

I do not wait for you to tell me the brands that you like. This is not the exercise. You may not like Disney, but you may very much align with it. It is not a matter of taste. It is a matter of alignment.

NIZZAR BEN CHEKROUNE • S2 00:09:04

Françoise answered it directly: I see why you told me I dislike the brand, but I like the tagline. She had spent four minutes the previous day explaining why Disney is manipulation. She then chose it. That is not inconsistency. It is the exercise doing the only thing it is for.

What it means in practice. The house is structurally close to the thing Françoise most dislikes. Disney sells transformation as escape. This house sells revelation as fact. The distance between them is one doctrine wide, and it is on page 11.

One line worth keeping

Microsoft's stated purpose, read off the board, is to empower every person and organisation on the planet.

Twenty-seven minutes later Anna refused the word empowering for this house, with an argument strong enough to become a value and then a permanent ban.

The board contained the objection before anyone raised it, and the brand it belongs to is the one Anna had refused outright the day before. page 16.

Two agreements, one split.

Both founders chose the Magician and the Lover, independently, and for different reasons. Two people arriving at the same archetype by different roads is a stronger result than two people agreeing, because neither borrowed the answer.

Agreement 01

The Magician

Françoise. Transformation as the literal mechanism of the product. Believing in this power of transformation, that you can become. That translates what the power of perfume can be. S2 00:15:11

Anna. Not transformation but revelation. See the magic. See that what is impossible to be created, possible. See behind the veil. We stopped so much to see the magic. S2 00:21:08

What they share. Something present but unseen is made perceptible. That is what a composed scent does physically, and it is the only claim this house can make that is both mystical and true. Anna gave the doctrine its other half the day before: truth always wins in a magical way. S1 02:15:51

Agreement 02

The Lover

Françoise. Took the tagline and claimed it. Quality is remembered long after the price is forgotten. It could have been our tagline. S2 00:15:53

Anna. Turned the Lover inward, which is the more useful reading. You say to yourself, I love myself enough to create something that expresses my essence. To buy it for yourself, you need to love yourself a lot. It is self-love confirmation. S2 00:21:08

What they share. The object is not bought to be seen by others. It is a private act. That single sentence rules out most of the advertising this category runs, and it is the client-side of Nizzar's self-to-world arc on page 24.

The split

Françoise took Patagonia, for the second day running. Anna took Lego. Neither objected to the other, and Patagonia had been on Anna's own shortlist.

Anna also weighed Nike and Microsoft. Nike she set aside as an effect of the product rather than a value of the house. Microsoft she refused on the word control, while keeping the idea of legacy. She had refused the same brand the previous day, for the lack of truth.

What the archetype pair already forbids

- NO Comparative advertising. The Lover does not argue, and the Magician does not explain.
- NO Discounting. Gucci's line is an instruction about price behaviour, and Hermès confirmed it the day before: it is never discounted.
- NO Demystifying the composition in public. The Magician protects the method. The formula belongs to the client, not to the feed.
- NO Mass personalisation dressed as bespoke. Both archetypes die the moment the thing is repeatable.

THIS PAGE SETTLES the primary archetype pair: Magician and Lover, in that order.

Explorer and Creator are not competing.

They sit at opposite ends of one line. One describes how the material arrives. The other describes what the client does once it has. The house needs both, in that order.

Françoise • the Explorer, upstream

We work mostly with natural ingredients, producers, and we work with nature. Connected to the nature of botanics, but also the nature of human being. Climate change can affect my work. It is interconnected.

FRANÇOISE RAPP • S2 00:17:27

As a perfumer I feel like an explorer, because creating is an exploration. When I make your perfume, it is who you are, what I am going to use. I am going to order ingredients that I don't know, that I haven't worked with.

FRANÇOISE RAPP • S2 00:19:19

What this is worth. The house buys unfamiliar materials on behalf of one client. That is expensive, inefficient, and the proof that the commission is real. Most houses reach for a palette they already own. This one does not, and it is the strongest concrete differentiator either session produced.

Anna • the Creator, downstream

The club, where the people connect. After you have your fragrance. Where you can play, where you can express, where you can connect with others. Come with your most exciting part of you, this childish version of willing to create.

ANNA ESEN • S2 00:27:23

What this is worth. It answers the question every house at this price eventually faces: what does the client buy the second time? The answer is not a second bottle. It is a room the first bottle already opened.

The ruling that ordered them

You can have different expressions, but you have only one soul. The fragrance is the entry to the club. The club is not the subject, it is the impact.

Nizzar Ben Chekroune • S2 00:28:14 • agreed by both

It is the same rule as page 11, arriving from the other direction on the other day. The club is aftermath. Aftermath is never sold.

The spine

Read left to right. The Explorer earns the material. The Lover and the Magician do the reading and the composition. The Creator is what the client becomes once the work is done.

- 01 Explorer. Sourcing. Producers, unfamiliar materials, seasons, origin. Françoise's territory, and the cost base.
- 02 Lover. The reading. One person, studied closely enough that the formula could not fit anyone else.
- 03 Magician. The composition. Something already present is made perceptible. The house never explains this step in public.
- 04 Creator. The aftermath. The client wears it and enters a room of people who did the same. Anna's territory, and the compounding asset.

THIS PAGE SETTLES that Explorer and Creator are both retained, as a sequence rather than a choice.

Five words the team would use, five years from now.

The frame: the house has outgrown the boutique maison it was meant to be, the founders have chartered a plane, and the whole team is in the air on the way to an island they have not been told about. The question is not what you would say about the house. It is what they would.

01	02	03	04	05 • the joker
Supportive	Visionary	Unique	Efficient	Entrepreneurial
WORD	WHAT IT MEANT IN THE ROOM		THE BEHAVIOUR IT COMMITS THE HOUSE TO
Supportive	Arrived after empowering was refused. Françoise: we are creating a supportive environment for our team to grow, to expand, like our clients . Her example was concrete: a single mother on the team who does not have to worry about her children.		Support is structural, not emotional. Childcare, hours and money, decided before anyone has to ask. A house that says supportive and makes people ask has said nothing.
Visionary	The only word agreed with no argument at all. Anna: definitely agreed upon with two hands .		The house states where the category is going and then goes there first, in public, under its own name. Vision spoken only internally is planning.
Unique	Anna moved it off the product and onto people: the uniqueness of every individual being a part of the company, and bringing their uniqueness on the table . Respectful was then dropped as already contained here.		No two roles are written from the same template. Hiring reads for what a person brings that nobody else does, and the job is shaped around it afterwards.
Efficient	Anna proposed it against her own taste: it is not the sexiest word . Nizzar kept it precisely for that: we need something that is grounding . It reappears the same day on the Oenobiol website as proven efficiency , which both founders noticed.		Efficiency is spent on time, not on output. Ten hours of work that used to take forty returns thirty hours to the person, at the same pay. This is the value that costs money.
Entrepreneurial the single word, if only one	A translation problem that became the best definition of the day. Françoise meant entreprendre . Anna offered her own coinage: workpreneur . Nizzar named the three parts: trust, attunement to one's own creative power, and action taken without returning for permission.		People are hired for judgement and then allowed to use it. The founders expect to be told what to do by the people they hired, and to be grown by them.

It doesn't make sense to hire smart people and then tell them what to do. We hire smart people so they tell us what to do.

STEVE JOBS, QUOTED IN THE SESSION • S2 00:55:51 • BOTH FOUNDERS AGREED

Why the joker landed on this one

Forced to keep one, Anna chose entrepreneurial and explained the choice as a containment argument: everyone will feel very aligned and uniquely. It is already including their uniqueness inside. And it is also supportive. S2 01:28:22

One word that carries three. That is the test the whole exercise was built on.

THIS PAGE SETTLES the five culture values, and that entrepreneurial leads them. Behaviour on page 26.

Four words were argued and thrown out.

The most useful page in Section I. A word that survives an argument is worth five that were never tested. Two of these refusals became permanent rules.

Refused 01 • became a rule

Empowering

Françoise offered it first. Anna refused it, and the refusal is the sharpest thing said across either day.

A woman doesn't need to be empowered. We have been sold the story of empowering as if we don't carry the power within ourselves. You see a mother whose baby is threatened. She will kill you. You don't need to empower her.

ANNA ESEN • S2 00:40:10

Françoise did not defend the word. She found the thing underneath it, and the room agreed on supportive in one move.

The rule it produced. This house never addresses a person as incomplete. Not a client, not a candidate, not a member of the team. The word is banned from all copy, internal and external. page 34 carries it into the lexicon.

And the evidence for how hard the ban is. Twenty-eight minutes later, arguing a point she cared about, Anna reached for it twice herself. S2 01:08:06 That is not a lapse. It is the reason the rule has to be written down: the word is so embedded that the person who refused it still has to fight it.

Refused 02 • absorbed

Respectful

Françoise proposed it. Anna paused on it, and Nizzar named the problem: it is already implied. If you are supportive, you respect people. It is a waste of an adjective. S2 00:47:08

Refused 03 • absorbed

Cutting edge

Anna proposed it, for a real reason: we are completely destroying the way companies create fragrances. Françoise took it apart. A house that knows where it is going and does it in a way nobody else does is already at the edge. Saying so spends a slot and adds nothing.

Verbatim from the exercise. The house does not use the phrase in its own copy.

Refused 04 • relocated

Present

Anna meant something precise: attention as the condition for the work to carry anything. Françoise objected on the grounds of the exercise, not the idea. I don't know if people would talk about the company like that. That is a state of being. S2 00:52:08

Where it went. Not lost. Presence is not how a team describes an employer, it is how a house runs a consultation. It returns as conscious in the client profile and as service rules on page 49.

The discipline underneath all four

Five slots. A word contained by another word spends a slot and buys nothing. That test removed two candidates in under a minute and is worth keeping permanently, because it applies to far more than adjectives. It applies to product lines, service tiers, channels, and the objects named on page 48.

Keep the phrase. A waste of an adjective is now house shorthand for anything duplicating something the house already has.

The pattern

Three of the four were refused for the same underlying reason: the word had become common currency and had stopped carrying weight. Nizzar named it directly: you hate the words that became mainstream.

That instinct is a brand asset. Section III turns it into a working lexicon rather than leaving it as a shared allergy.

One commission left. Who gets it?

The frame was absolute. The house is rich, everything works, and the universe permits exactly one more client. Not a segment. One person, with a name and a face. Five words came out of it, one of them twice refused before it was taken, and one of them thrown out after being agreed.

01 • Anna

Influential

Already standing where they can move the world. Françoise: their circle is how the house grows, because they refer.

02 • Françoise

Passionate

A drive, not a hobby. They love scent, and they are consumed by something else too: art, work, a cause.

03 • Anna • the

joker

Conscious

The counterweight. Influential and passionate can turn into disruptive power. Three alternatives were tested and dropped.

04 • Anna, via

Nizzar

Change agents

Refused as too niche, set aside, and then taken anyway. The one word in the session that came back from the dead.

05 • Françoise

Consideration

Not on the board. Anna found it. Nizzar: that is why I love it.

Wealthy was agreed, and then dismantled

Françoise proposed it plainly: because we want people to have the money to buy our products. Nizzar recorded Anna's agreement. And then, twenty seconds later, he took it back himself.

If I had all the clients of the world, if I already succeeded in my brand, if I had to choose my client, would I choose him to be wealthy? No. Influential, yeah. Wealthy is not what I would want him or her to be.

NIZZAR BEN CHEKROUNE • S2 01:07:45

Anna finished it, using herself as the example, and this is the paragraph that sets the pricing philosophy for the whole house:

I might not be wealthy now, but I know if I step in through the perfume in my power, I can change the world. So even if I am not wealthy, I will find a way to get it. Wealthy is something to afford, but if someone believes in something, they will find a way to pay for it. There are a lot of wealthy people that we do not want as a client.

ANNA ESEN • S2 01:08:06

Wealthy is not a criterion of this house. The price is high and does not move. Being able to reach it is not a qualification. page 50 is the consequence.

Why change agents survived being refused

Françoise called it too specific for a whole clientele and asked for it to be set aside. Nizzar refused to set it aside. Then he restated it as a purpose rather than a label, and Anna added the qualifier that made it acceptable.

I can take revolutionary, but revolutionary is like, I fight it. Change agent can go with the peaceful energy. I do not need to fight as a revolution.

S2 01:09:20

Françoise: Okay, you convinced me. Nizzar: Okay, you got it.

The same shape as Malcolm X the previous day. page 10.

Consideration, and why it is the best word in the document

Françoise wanted a human soft skill. Anna reached past the board and said consideration. Nizzar took it immediately, and said why.

French has this tendency to have words with a very specific meaning. Consideration here has the weight of being grateful, respectful, and it has awareness. It is not just myself in the centre of everything. S2 01:10:26

It also closes the loop with the previous day. The four brands the founders refused all reduced to I care. Consideration is that, in the client.

ALSO TESTED

WHY IT FELL

Enlightened	Anna: these are the people who believe they don't need food, they don't need perfumes, they are already gods in the flesh. A person with nothing left to want is not a client.
Spiritual	Carries too much freight, and narrows the house to one vocabulary.
Intelligent	Nizzar would have kept it. Anna closed it: Bill Gates is intelligent, but with the influence and the passion, he can destroy. Intelligence is not a direction.
Revolutionary • Wealthy	Revolutionary carried a fight. Wealthy was agreed and then refused by Nizzar and Anna together, the one reversal in either session.

THIS PAGE SETTLES the client in five words, and that money is not one of them.

How it sounds, how it looks, how it lands.

The last three parts of the brand anatomy, run in the final twenty-five minutes before Nizzar had to leave. The fastest work of either day, and the most fluent.

07 • Tone of voice

How others would describe us

The frame: the Queen of Jordan tells her best friend about the house.

- Thoughtful. Françoise, with the reason: they loved it because there was a card with their name in the package. They see us as a very thoughtful brand in every detail. S2 01:14:46
- Iconoclastic. Anna asked what it meant and took it on the spot. Against established belief. The joker.
- Impactful. Anna. Five years from now, we are impactful.
- Authentic. Françoise: we do the luxury service and product, but we have this genuine authenticity also.
- Pioneers. Françoise's word for Anna's idea of leadership. Nizzar: a pioneer is someone who paves the road. Anna: opens the path.

08 • Look and feel

How we are, and how we make them feel

- Chic. Anna said elegant. Nizzar overruled it in four words: of course, chic. The joker. Reasons on page 36.
- Bold. Anna. A statement of strength.
- Sleek. Françoise.
- Timeless. Françoise, at a hundred per cent from both. Nizzar: when you are timeless you insinuate that you are here to stay.
- Professional. Nizzar refused it first, as a choice made from fear of the woo-woo corner. Anna reframed it as craftsmanship and he accepted: the word sounded to my perception as laboratory. But it is necessary in what we are doing.

Sophisticated was refused: it is inside chic, and it is lower than chic.

09 • Value proposition

What a client feels afterwards

- Satisfaction. Françoise.
- Fulfilment. Anna. Nizzar refused to choose between the two: you can be a tree with your roots in the earth and still have the feather. We anchor and expand.
- Connection. Anna. To themselves, to others, to the plants, to the earth.
- Personable. Anna. Customised. Françoise: the core of the business.
- Recognised. Françoise, last, and the only one Nizzar picked for himself. The joker. Like I feel I have been seen.

Recognised, and where it came from

Anna explained it with the thing that actually happens in this business, and it is a detail no competitor can copy because it is a habit rather than a feature.

You can buy every perfume, you can buy everything. She recognised the soul, the purpose, the mission, what is coming from this person, and put it into a bottle. When I received my audio message from Françoise, I felt recognised for who I am, even beyond the way I could express myself.

ANNA ESEN • S2 01:33:59

Nizzar, over the top of it: she saw you. Françoise: Recognised. I agree with Anna. And I have goosebumps.

The audio message is already part of the service and has never been named as one. page 45 makes it an artefact of the brand.

The positioning triangle, stated in the room

Between exercises 08 and 09, Nizzar drew the position as a circle between three brands, and made both founders look up the third.

Gucci • Cartier • Oenobiol

We have to find a way to look like scientists that are high-end luxury. Crazy scientists, in a funky way. S2 01:24:00 Oenobiol's own site says proven efficiency, which both founders spotted. page 37.

Five lists. One word each.

With ten minutes left, Nizzar played what he called his joker: each list of five collapsed to a single word. Twenty-five words became five. Those five are the brand, and every page in Sections II and III is downstream of them.

Culture Entrepreneurial It already contains unique and supportive. S2 01:28:04	The client Conscious Anna: the middle ground of everything inside. S2 01:29:45	Tone of voice Iconoclastic Françoise: it is what it is, because we are disruptive. S2 01:30:41	Look and feel Chic Nizzar: of course, chic. Don't even question that. S2 01:18:07	The value Recognised Françoise: like I feel I have been seen. S2 01:27:21
---	---	---	--	---

The sentence the joker produced

Nizzar put two of the five together in the room and immediately tested them out loud.

We are building an iconoclastic conscious brand.

Then the test: if you say that at a dinner, people are going to say, what is that? Tell me more, please. S2 01:31:11 Anna: and it is a perfume.

A description that produces a question rather than a nod is doing its job. It is also the only positioning line in this document that a founder can say at a table without sounding like she is selling something, which is the whole requirement of page 11.

What the two days agree on

Three exercises on the first day and six on the second, run separately and with different material, produced one instruction.

Do not add anything to the person.

The Magician reveals rather than transforms. The Lover is turned inward. The culture refused the one word on the board that promised to add power. The client is chosen for already having it. And the anti-brand is stated as covering rather than revealing: it is fume rather than perfume. Five independent routes, one destination.

The five, read as one person

Put the jokers in a line and they describe a single figure rather than five attributes.

Entrepreneurial is how she works. Conscious is what she is. Iconoclastic is how she is described by others. Chic is how she carries it. Recognised is what she feels afterwards.

That is not five brand words. It is a portrait, which is the essence on page 23.

The two words that carry the tension

Iconoclastic and chic pull in opposite directions, and that is the point. Nizzar defended chic on exactly those grounds: in chic, you are ballsy. You need to be strong to be chic, because being chic has this soul.

S2 01:32:05

Françoise: Saint Laurent was chic, and he was the first designer who made trousers for women. Chic and iconoclastic in the same person, which is the closest historical parallel either founder named.

Keep both. A house that is only chic becomes decoration. A house that is only iconoclastic becomes a manifesto with nothing to sell.

THIS PAGE SETTLES the five words. Everything after this is their working out.

You already are someone.

Most perfume covers you. A mask, a shield, an armour, a fragrance that is not yours. That is fume rather than perfume.

We do the opposite, and we do it slowly.

One person, read closely, for as long as it takes. Materials we go and find, including the ones we have never worked with. A formula composed once, from you, and never made for anyone else.

We will not tell you what it will do for you. We will tell you what is in it, where it came from and who made it. The rest is yours, and it is not ours to promise.

Some of it will look like magic. Truth usually does.

Reason for being, mission, vision.

Three statements doing three different jobs. The first explains why the house should exist. The second is what it does on a Tuesday. The third is the state of the world it works toward, and it has to be large enough to survive being reached.

Reason for being

Because most perfume covers a person, and almost nothing in the world says back to her who she already is.

Nizzar named the enemy inside the category rather than outside it: what most perfumes are doing is covering your essence with a fragrance that is not you. S1 02:09:43

Mission

To read one person closely enough that the formula could not fit anyone else, and to go and find whatever it takes to build it.

Two verbs, and they belong to the two founders. Reading is the consultation. Finding is the sourcing, including materials the nose has never used, ordered for one commission.

Vision

A room of people who were each read this closely, and what they do once they are in it together.

The club, stated as an outcome instead of a feature. It also contains the commercial ambition honestly: recognition at that level is what makes referral the only channel the house needs.

Anna's ripple, from S1 01:26:50: separate drops, and the expansion that happens where they intersect.

How to use these three

They are not copy. None of the three sentences above should appear on a website as written. They are the test a piece of work has to pass before it ships.

WHEN YOU ARE DECIDING

ASK

Whether to take a commission	Can we read this person? If the client arrives wanting a scent she has already imagined, the house is being used as a supplier. Refuse or reframe.
Whether to add a product	Does it come from reading one subject? A house accord for a hotel does. A candle does not, and that is fine: page 50 gives the candle its own honest frame.
Whether a sentence is on brand	Does it promise an effect? If yes, it is off brand regardless of how well it is written.
Whether to hire someone	Will we be told what to do by this person within a year? If not, the house has hired a pair of hands.

THIS PAGE SETTLES reason for being, mission and vision.

The sentence that does the most work

It is fume rather than perfume.

Nizzar, S1 02:09:43. Four words that hold the reason for being, the anti-brand and the product difference at once, and that survive being said out loud in French and in English.

It is not the public line. Express different is, and it came from the same session. This one is the internal test.

Seven beliefs, and what each one costs.

A belief that costs nothing is a slogan. Each of these removes an option the house could otherwise take, and the removed option is printed beside it. If a cost looks unacceptable, argue with the belief, not with the cost.

WE BELIEVE	BECAUSE	WHAT IT COSTS US
Power is not given.	Nobody walks in here incomplete. This came out of the room as a refusal rather than a position, which is why it is first.	The entire persuasion engine of the category. The house cannot sell aspiration, and aspiration is what sells fragrance.
You never sell the aftermath. You sell the truth.	Nizzar, S1 01:01:26 . The only thing nobody can deny is whether you like your perfume. Everything past that is the client's to report.	Every sentence that would work. No effect, no frequency, no attraction, no transformation in the copy. The most persuasive material the house owns is unusable by the house.
Truth always wins in a magical way.	Anna, S1 02:15:51 , about Frida Kahlo. It is the belief that makes the previous one survivable, and the only permitted form of the word magic.	Patience. A house built on this cannot buy its way to attention, and has to accept that being right early looks identical to being ignored.
A material has an origin, a season and a person behind it.	Françoise buys from producers she knows. It is a supply chain, and it is the only verifiable claim available in a category full of unverifiable ones.	Margin. Naming the origin means buying at the harvest from a producer who can be named, rather than at the best quote from a broker.
Repetition ends the promise.	A formula composed twice was never a reading. It was a product with a story attached.	The most profitable thing a perfume house can sell, which is a second bottle of something that already worked, sold to somebody else.
Natural is a constraint, not a virtue.	Naturals carry origin, season and a producer. They also vary between batches, fade faster than synthetics, and several are potent allergens. The house works with them for the first reason and manages the rest.	The easiest marketing story in the category. The house does not claim natural is safer, cleaner or kinder, because a perfumer knows better and a client will eventually find out.
We are not for everybody, and we never tell anybody they are not enough.	Both halves were settled out loud and by different founders. Nizzar, S1 00:51:58 , and Anna, S1 01:29:50 . Most houses at this price manage only the first half.	Simplicity. Every piece of communication has to be checked twice, once for clarity about who it is for and once for anything that would make a reader feel second class.

How a belief gets tested

By the offers the house turns down. Four that will arrive inside two years, and the answer to each is already above.

- A department store wants an exclusive. Refused. Not on snobbery, on belief two and on Hermès: the house cannot control price behaviour once the bottle is on someone else's shelf.
- A client asks for six bottles for six friends. Refused as written, offered as six commissions. Belief five.
- A journalist asks for the effect. Answered with the material list and the dates. Belief two. If she writes the effect herself, that is exactly right.
- A distributor wants a clean beauty story. Refused. Belief six. The house publishes its material list and lets people draw conclusions.

The one to watch

Belief two will be under pressure before any of the others, and from inside. It is the belief that makes marketing hard, and every good agency the house ever hires will propose breaking it in the first week, in good faith, with a beautiful deck.

Write the refusal down now, while nothing is at stake. That is what a platform is for.

Essence, promise, positioning.

Three tools of decreasing abstraction. The essence is one word you never say out loud. The promise is the sentence the house is held to. The positioning is the paragraph you hand to a new employee, a journalist or a lawyer.

Essence • internal only

Totem.

Nizzar's word, $1 00:59:03: we are giving them a totem for becoming. Françoise, without a pause: a talisman.

And then he bounded it himself, which is what makes it usable rather than mystical: this totem is not going to change everything. No, you need to change yourself as well. That is just going to be like a heartbeat. We are giving you this to remember.

A totem does not act. It reminds.
Every structural decision in this document falls out of that distinction.

Promise • said out loud

One person. One reading. One formula, composed once.

Short enough to survive a phone call, specific enough to be broken. If there is no way to fail a promise, it is a mood.

How it fails. A second bottle of the same formula, composed for anyone else. A reading conducted by someone other than the nose. A commission accepted for a person the house never met.

Reason to believe

The four proofs

- 01 The material list ships with the bottle. Origin and season named. page 44.
- 02 The formula is retired on delivery, with a number and a date the client can quote.
- 03 Materials are bought for the commission, including ones the nose has not worked with. The invoice exists.
- 04 The nose sends an audio message about what she found in the person and why she chose each material. page 45.

The positioning paragraph

For influential, passionate and conscious people who are changing something in the world, Rapp & Esen is a natural perfume maison that reads one person and composes a formula belonging to her alone. Unlike the category, which covers a person with a fragrance that is not hers, this house makes perceptible what is already there, from materials with a named origin, and never composes that formula again. It is chic, it is iconoclastic, and it does not tell you what it will do for you.

FOR WHOM	Four of the five client words. Consideration is a filter the house applies rather than a segment it names.
WHAT IT IS	A maison, not a brand or a studio. A maison has a nose in it.
AGAINST WHAT	The category's own mechanism, named by Nizzar: covering. Not other bespoke perfumers, who are too few and too aligned to be the enemy.
WHY BELIEVE IT	Named origin, retired formula, and the audio message. All three are checkable by the client.

What it deliberately omits

Price. Wealth. Location. The founders' biographies. The club.

Wealth is omitted on purpose and it is the one omission that will be questioned. See page 17: the room agreed it, then took it back, and the reason is Anna's.

THIS PAGE SETTLES essence, promise and positioning.

The arc, and the axis.

Two models came out of the first session, forty minutes apart, from two different exercises. They are the same model seen from two angles, and together they explain what a client is actually buying and in what order.

The arc • self-centricity, then world-centricity

It arrived out of Madonna against Michael Jackson, of all places, and it is the cleanest thing either founder heard all day.

You come to the brand with the willingness of the self-centricity, but then you expand into the world-centricity. Sometimes you need to take a step to be egoistic. I need to self-centre myself so I know myself better. I step into the version that I know will have the capacity to hold the world's responsibility.

NIZZAR BEN CHEKROUNE • S1 02:44:27

Anna: and the perfume goes from the self-centricity into the world-centricity.
Nizzar: it comes always from the self-centricity. Anna: le noyau. The roots.
Françoise closed it: that conclusion is aligned full and deeply with the brand.

Why it matters commercially. It reconciles the two things this house sells that look contradictory. The purchase is a private act of self-regard, which is the Lover turned inward. The client is a change agent, which is outward. They are not in tension. They are sequential, and the sequence has a direction that cannot be reversed. Nobody arrives here to change the world. They arrive for themselves, and the rest follows.

What it forbids. Any communication that leads with impact, mission or the club. That is selling the second half of the arc to someone standing at the start of it, and it is the exact failure page 11 describes.

S1 02:04:25

The axis

Nizzar, hearing Françoise use the word transformation twice about Marilyn Monroe:

Transformation is literally what our perfume is promising. Transformation and transcendence as well. It is just like an axis with X and Y. Transcendence at the high level, and at the low level you have transformation. Something is linear and horizontal, the other is vertical and attuned with something else.

And everything in between is life.

How to read it

Horizontal. Transformation. Change over time, in the world, along a line. This is what the client does.

Vertical. Transcendence. Change in register, attuned to something else. This is what the composition does.

A house that only moves horizontally is a self-improvement business. One that only moves vertically is a spiritual practice. This is neither, and the diagram is the reason.

Why the drop sits at the origin

Because a third model, from the same session, explains the other two. Nizzar, watching Anna describe what the club is for, saw the iconography before anyone had asked for it.

You know when you have a teardrop on the water, it has a ripple. I picture a drop in the water that has this effect of expansion in the ocean. So the perfume has some kind of watery thing.

NIZZAR BEN CHEKROUNE • S1 01:26:06

Anna had recorded a podcast episode about that exact image eighteen months earlier, and said so before he had finished: separate drops, separate ripples, and an expansion that happens only where they intersect.

The drop is the reading, one person, small. The rings are the arc, self first and then outward. The intersections are the club, which the house does not build. page 40 turns it into the identity.

THIS PAGE SETTLES the arc, the axis and the origin of the visual device.

Four archetypes, weighted.

An unweighted blend is four brands in a trench coat. These proportions decide which archetype wins when two of them want different things, which happens more often than anyone expects.

40 per cent • Lead Magician Reveals. Does not explain. Owns the composition and protects the method. Speaks in the work, never about it.	35 per cent • Lead Lover Turned inward. A private act between the house and one person. Owens price behaviour, discretion and the object.	15 per cent • support Explorer Upstream only. Materials, producers, seasons, the unfamiliar order. Never the customer-facing posture.	10 per cent • support Creator Downstream only. What the client does afterwards, in the club. Never applied to the product.
---	--	--	---

Who wins the arguments that are coming

THE ARGUMENT	THE RULING, AND WHICH ARCHETYPE MAKES IT
Should the site explain how a formula is built?	No. Magician over Explorer. The sourcing story is told through named materials on the card that ships with the bottle, where it is proof rather than content.
Should the club be visible from outside?	Its existence, yes. Its inside, no. Lover over Creator. A club you can see into is a mailing list.
Should the house publish the nose's sourcing travel?	Only afterwards, and only as material provenance. Magician . Travel content turns the house into a documentary about itself.
Can a client request a material?	Yes, and it is recorded. Lover over Magician. Refusing a client's own memory of a place would be mysticism at her expense.
Should the Amazon project be announced?	No. Magician and belief two together. It is co-created, it is real, and others say it. page 11 .

THIS PAGE SETTLES the weighting, and which archetype holds the casting vote.

The four to avoid drifting into

- Sage. The drift is teaching. A natural perfumer has a great deal to teach, and every hour spent teaching converts the maison into a school. Signal: the journal outgrows the client list.
- Innocent. The drift arrives through the word natural, as purity. Belief six forbids it. Signal: the words free from appear anywhere.
- Ruler. Refused twice by Anna, on both days, on the word control and on the lack of truth. The drift is the house correcting a client's taste. Signal: a client is told what suits her.
- Everyman. The drift is accessibility, usually arriving as a smaller bottle at a lower price. It ends the Lover. page 50 is how the house serves the same instinct without the drift. Signal: the phrase entry point is used internally.

The five values, written as behaviour.

A value stated as an adjective cannot be broken, which makes it useless. Each of the five is rewritten as something the house does, something it refuses, and the signal that says it has stopped being true.

Value 01 • the joker

Entrepreneurial

What it means here. Read it in French. Entreprendre, to take something on. Anna's coinage for it was workpreneur. Three parts, all required: the house trusts the person, the person is attuned to her own judgement, and she acts without returning for permission. Forced to keep one culture word, both founders kept this one, because it already carries unique and supportive inside it.

We do

- YES Give a decision away with its budget attached.
- YES Expect to be told what to do, within the first year, by the person hired to do it.

We refuse

- NO Approval chains for reversible decisions.
- NO Punishing a reversible mistake made in good judgement.

Failure signal

A founder is the last approval on something neither founder understands better than the person asking.

Value 02

Supportive

What it means here. Support is a structure, decided and funded before anyone has to ask. Françoise named the example herself: a person on the team who does not have to worry about her children. Support that must be requested has already failed, because the request costs the person something.

We do

- YES Publish the terms. Hours, leave, care, and what happens in a bad month, written before the first hire.
- YES Pay for the thing rather than reimburse it.

We refuse

- NO Benefits that require a conversation with a founder.
- NO Flexibility offered as a favour, which is flexibility that can be withdrawn.

Failure signal

Someone thanks a founder personally for something that should have been a policy. That is support running on goodwill.

Value 03

Visionary

What it means here. The only word agreed with no argument at all, which makes it the easiest to let go soft. Vision is a position stated in public, under the house's name, before it is safe. Vision kept internal is planning, and planning is not a value.

We do

- YES Say plainly what the house thinks the category gets wrong, and sign it.
- YES Commit to the position in the product first, then in words.

We refuse

- NO Trend commentary. A house that reacts is not seeing anything.
- NO Predictions with no consequence attached to being wrong.

Failure signal

The house is quoted in a trend piece about a movement it did not start. Being included is pleasant, and it is evidence of following.

The two that cost money, and the two tests.

Value 04

Unique

What it means here. Anna moved this word off the product and onto people, and that move is the whole value. The product being one of one is a fact. The house treating every person inside it as one of one is a choice, made in the hiring rather than in the language.

We do

- YES Write the role after meeting the person, around what she carries that nobody else does.
- YES Keep headcount low enough that this stays possible.

We refuse

- NO Job templates.
Interchangeable titles.
- NO Hiring for a gap on an organisation chart.

Failure signal

Two people could swap jobs on a Monday and nobody would notice by Friday.

Value 05

Efficient

What it means here. Anna proposed it against her own taste and Nizzar kept it for being grounding. It is the only value of the five that can be audited from outside. The rule is that the gains are spent on time, not on output. Work that took forty hours and now takes ten returns thirty hours to the person, at unchanged pay. A house that banks the thirty hours has an efficiency programme, not a value.

We do

- YES Measure hours worked, and treat a rise as a failure of design rather than a sign of commitment.
- YES Automate the administration. Never the reading.

We refuse

- NO Growth paid for in hours.
- NO Presence as a proxy for contribution.

Failure signal

Revenue per person rises while hours per person also rise. That combination means the house is selling its team's time and calling it efficiency.

The hiring test

One question, asked of every candidate, straight out of the culture exercise.

Tell me about a time you did the right thing without asking, and what it cost you.

An answer with no cost in it is a story about being praised. The house is looking for the person who paid something and would do it again. That is entreprendre, and it cannot be taught afterwards.

The annual test

Once a year, put the five values in front of the whole team and ask two questions. Do not ask whether the values are true.

- 01 Which of the five did we break this year, and on what date?
- 02 Which one has quietly stopped costing us anything?

The second question is the dangerous one. A value that costs nothing has been downgraded to a description, and page 22 explains why that is the end of it.

THIS PAGE SETTLES the five values as behaviour, with a failure signal each.

Fume, not perfume.

The anti-brand was stated in four words, in the middle of an argument about Margaret Thatcher, and it is the most compressed thing either session produced.

What most perfumes are doing is covering your essence with a fragrance that is not you. You are putting a mask, a shield, an armour. Covering your essence instead of revealing it. It is fume rather than perfume.

NIZZAR BEN CHEKROUNE • S1 02:09:43

The enemy is not another house. It is a mechanism, and almost every house uses it. That is a better enemy than a competitor, because it cannot go out of business and the house never has to name anybody.

Five adjacent businesses this house will be mistaken for

NOT THIS	WHY IT IS TEMPTING	WHAT THE DRIFT LOOKS LIKE FROM INSIDE
Not a fragrance brand	It is the only model anyone in the category knows how to finance, and it scales.	A launch calendar appears. Then a limited edition, then a summer version. None came from reading a person, and the promise is already dead.
Not a wellness brand	Anna's vocabulary reaches for energy and frequency, and a large market is waiting there with money in hand.	Copy begins to imply effect. Calm, balance, sleep, attraction. Those are regulated claims in most markets this house sells into. Françoise refused them herself, on better grounds than the regulator's: there are so many parameters.
Not a personalisation service	It is the cheap version of the same sentence, and the technology to fake it is sitting there.	A questionnaire appears on the site. Then a quiz, then a configurator with eight bases and twelve modifiers. Mass personalisation dressed as reading.
Not a cause brand	The client is a change agent and the Amazon project is real. Saying so would be easy, true, and well received.	A percentage appears on the site. Then an impact report. The left hand knows what the right hand gave, and the house has started selling the aftermath. page 11.
Not a clean beauty brand	Natural materials make the story free, and retailers ask for it.	The phrase free from appears. Certification follows. Belief six is gone, and a perfumer has publicly claimed something she knows to be untrue.

The drift that will actually happen

Not the wellness one, which both founders would catch. The cause drift, because it arrives wearing the house's own values. A journalist asks about the Amazon perfumes. The answer is generous and specific and completely sincere, and within a year the house is a sustainability story with a perfume attached.

The answer, decided now, in writing. The house describes what it does and never what that is worth. Two of the formulas are co-created with communities in the Amazon, using materials they harvest, and they are paid as partners. That is a fact. We give back is a claim, and the house does not make it. If the journalist writes it, she is right, and she wrote it.

A test for any new idea

Four questions. All four have to pass.

- 01 Was it read from one subject?
- 02 Is it composed once?
- 03 Would the nose sign it?
- 04 Can we describe it without naming an effect?

Three out of four is a no. Most of the ideas on this page score three, which is exactly why they are dangerous.

One exception exists, and it is deliberate: page 50.

Always. Never.

The platform reduced to instructions a new person can follow in her first week without understanding any of it. Everything here is derived from a page earlier in this section, and the reference is printed so the reasoning can be found.

Always

- YES Name the material, its origin and its season on the card that ships with the bottle.
- YES Have the nose conduct the reading in person. If that is impossible, postpone it.
- YES Send the audio message. It is not a nice extra, it is the proof of the value proposition.
- YES Record the formula number and the date it was closed, and give both to the client.
- YES Declare the allergen content plainly. Naturals carry them, and a client will find out.
- YES Answer inside one working day, including when the answer is not ready yet.
- YES Return the sourcing cost if a commission is abandoned after materials were bought.
- YES Write down every refusal and its date. The refusals are the brand.
- YES Publish the capacity honestly, and only if the number is true.

Never

- NO Compose a personal formula for a second person. No exception exists.
- NO Name an effect. Not calm, not attraction, not transformation, not frequency.
- NO Tell a person what suits her. Ask, compose, present.
- NO Use the word empowering, on any surface, internal or external.
- NO Discount, gift a discount, or set the price by market.
- NO Announce what the house gives back. Brief it, and let others write it.
- NO Publish a client's name without a signed release, and never as a testimonial.
- NO Sell through anyone who can set the price.
- NO Photograph a client's bottle for the house's own use.

Three that will be tested in year one

The discount. It will arrive as a favour to a first client who introduced three others. The generous move is to refuse the discount and give something that is not money: an earlier slot, a larger presentation, the nose's time. Money given back says the price was never real. Hermès was chosen by both founders partly for exactly this.

The testimonial. An influential client will offer, unprompted. It will be difficult to decline and it should still be declined in that form. What the house can accept instead is on page 30.

The effect. A client will describe, beautifully and at length, what the perfume did for her. She is allowed to. The house may repeat that she said it only if it does not repeat what she said.

Where these live

Not in this document. On one page, in the room where the work happens, and inside the onboarding of every person who joins.

A rule nobody can recite is a rule that will be broken by someone acting in good faith, which is the most expensive way for it to happen.

Four doors. None of them is advertising.

People do not arrive at a house like this through a funnel. They arrive through one of four doors, each carrying a different belief about what is behind it, and each needing a different first move. Three of the four are opened by somebody who is already inside.

Door 01 • the majority

The referred

Arrives believing that a friend has something she cannot buy.

First move. Not a sale. A question about the person who sent her, which tells the house what she already understands.

Do not send a brochure. She has already had the only brochure that works, which is a person wearing it.

Door 02 • the family door

The lighter line

Arrives believing nothing, and buying because it smells good.

First move. Sell it with no promise at all. Nizzar's own words: you can join the family through something that is lighter, that has no big promise. It only has one thing. We like it. S1 01:10:07

Do not position it as a step toward a commission. page 50.

Door 03 • the second subject

The establishment

Arrives believing it is buying an amenity. Hotels were named in the session.

First move. Reframe the subject. A building can be read like a person: its site, its age, its light, what it was before.

Do not quote per litre. The moment the conversation is about volume, the house has become a supplier.

Door 04 • the compounding one

The member

Arrives believing nothing in particular. She is brought by a client, into a room, before she ever considers a commission.

First move. None. This door is not sold through. It is the club doing the work the house is forbidden from doing.

Do not put a commercial moment inside the room. page 32.

Why door one takes the whole effort

Anna argued for the narrowest possible client. Françoise argued that the narrowest definition excludes too much of the clientele. Both were right about different things, and Nizzar settled it in one image.

It is easier to walk down from the peak of the mountain than to climb it. We start with these people, because they make the others follow, rather than starting large and trying to go niche afterwards.

NIZZAR BEN CHEKROUNE • S2 01:04:28

So the house aims every action at door one, at the narrowest and most influential client it can reach, and lets the other three fill from the pressure that creates. There is no separate acquisition programme and there does not need to be one for several years.

The qualification test, which costs nothing. Anna gave it on the first day, about the negotiation table: the right client is the one who would never ask why do you care? S1 01:25:41 It is a single question asked of yourself after a first meeting, and it is more accurate than any brief.

What the house accepts instead of a testimonial

A client who wants to say something publicly is offered a different form. She may say that she has a formula, and she may say who composed it. She does not describe it, and the house does not repeat what she said.

Existence is public. Contents are not. That distinction protects the client, protects the Lover, and is more persuasive than praise because it cannot be bought.

It is also the same rule as the giving back, applied to a different subject. Others say it. The house does not.

THIS PAGE SETTLES the four doors, and that door one takes the house's whole effort.

Composed once. Remade forever.

This page resolves the tension Nizzar named on the first day and left open. Anna wanted forever, and she also wanted the next one. Read carelessly, the promise destroys the best revenue this house has. Read precisely, it creates it.

The rule, stated exactly

A formula is composed once, from one person, and is never composed for a second person. It is remade for its owner on request, for as long as the house exists.

Composing is the singular act. Remaking is service. Confusing the two means either selling the same reading twice, which ends the promise, or refusing a client her own perfume, which is absurd.

And the second formula

A person is allowed more than one portrait in a life. A second reading, years later, gets a second number, and the first stays in the register under its own name rather than being overwritten.

How it answers the forever problem

Nizzar found the answer himself, two hours later, in the last exercise of the first day, talking about Madonna: she was able to explore so many different facets and to reinvent herself almost for each album, without losing herself. S1 02:40:03

And the image underneath it, from the same passage: a tree can grow further and bigger when the roots are getting deeper. Anna, on the arc: le noyau. The roots.

So: the formula is the root, and the person is the growth. The bottle does not change, which is the forever. The person does, which is the movement. They were never in conflict. They were in different positions on the same tree.

Why this is the commercial engine

Natural materials fade. A formula built on naturals will not hold for years in a drawer, and a client who wears it daily will finish a bottle. Both facts point the same way: she comes back, and the house has already done the expensive part.

What it means for pricing. The commission is priced for the reading. The refill is priced for the liquid. Publishing that logic is persuasive, because it explains a number that would otherwise look arbitrary.

The four requests that will test it

THE REQUEST	ANSWER	WHY, AND WHAT IS OFFERED INSTEAD
My husband loves mine. Make him one of these.	NO	It is a second person wearing a reading of the first. Offered instead: his own commission, at full price, with the relationship noted in the reading if he wants it heard.
Can I have it as a candle for the house?	NO	A room is not the subject the formula was read from. Offered instead: a second commission read from the house itself, with its own number. A candle from the lighter line is a different object and carries no formula. page 50 .
I have finished the bottle.	YES	The refill, and it should be the easiest transaction the house runs. One message, no reconsultation, no upsell.
I have changed. Can it change with me?	YES, AS A NEW WORK	The most interesting request the house will receive, and the one Madonna already answered. A second reading, a second number, both kept.

The register

The rule needs an object or it is a claim. The house keeps a register: one line per formula, carrying a number, the client's name, the date of the reading, the date of composition and the date it was closed to the palette. The client receives that line, signed by the nose, with the bottle.

It costs almost nothing, it is impossible to fake retrospectively, and it is the physical form of the entire promise.

One thing to decide early

What happens to a formula when its owner dies. The answer that fits this house is that it passes with the estate and can be refilled by whoever holds it, and is still never composed for anyone else.

Decision on page 54.

THIS PAGE SETTLES that composition is singular, refilling is perpetual, and the forever-against-movement tension is closed.

The club. The impact, never the pitch.

Anna brought it into both sessions and it is the part of the business she owns. Nizzar made the structural ruling about it, both founders agreed on the spot, and this page is that ruling turned into a working design.

The fragrance is the entry to the club, but the club is not the subject. It is the impact.

NIZZAR BEN CHEKROUNE, AGREED BY ANNA ESEN • S2 00:28:14

What Anna actually described

The fullest version is on the first day, and it is more concrete than anything else in either recording about a part of the business that does not exist yet.

A part of the brand next to the perfume, and that is where my expertise is, is the club. They enter a room with other conscious entrepreneurs. They can sit on this advisory table, this collaboration table, and start connecting across borders globally. One part of becoming a client, when you join the yearly subscription, is becoming part of this internal club.

ANNA ESEN • S1 01:23:59

So the mechanic exists: a yearly membership, carried by the relationship rather than sold separately. The ruling is not about whether the club can be paid for. It is about what may be put in front of a person who has not yet commissioned anything.

What the ruling forbids

It forbids the club from appearing in the sale. Not from existing, not from being known, not from being wonderful. From being offered. The moment a prospect is told that buying a formula grants access to a room of influential people, the house has sold a membership with a perfume attached, and the reading has become a coupon.

This matters more than it sounds, because the club is genuinely the most valuable thing on offer to an influential client, and every commercial instinct will point at putting it in the deck. It is the same instruction as page 11, applied to the one asset most worth breaking it for.

ALLOWED

A client learns the club exists after the commission is agreed.

A yearly membership carried inside the client relationship.

A member brings a guest. Door 04.

The house hosts, pays and disappears.

Members find each other and do their own business.

FORBIDDEN

The club named on the site, in a proposal, or in a price list.

A membership sold on its own, or a tier that advertises access.

The house inviting a prospect so as to convert her.

A commercial moment inside the room. No presentations, no launches, no orders taken.

The house brokering that business or taking a position in it.

What the room is for

Anna described it precisely on the second day: a place to arrive with the part of yourself that wants to make something. Not networking. The distinction is that nobody enters the room needing anything from anyone else in it, which is what makes the room rare and what makes it work.

Everyone there has been read closely by the same person. That is a genuinely unusual thing to have in common, and it is the only membership criterion.

The ripples, and why the house does not build the club

Anna's own model answers this better than any service design would. Separate drops make separate ripples. The expansion happens where they intersect, and an intersection is not something a host can manufacture. S1 01:26:50

What the house can do is put the right drops close enough together, and then get out of the way. Everything else in this page is the discipline of getting out of the way.

The cheapest version that is still true

Do not build a club. Host a dinner. Eight people, once, no programme and no speeches.

If the second dinner is requested by the guests rather than proposed by the house, the club exists. If it is not, the house has learned that for the price of one dinner.

THIS PAGE SETTLES that the club may be paid for and may never be pitched.

Four anchors. Everything else is style.

Exercise 07 produced five words for how others should describe the house. Those are outcomes, not instructions. The four anchors below are how the house has to write in order for those five words to be what comes back.

Anchor 01 • the hard one

Never name the effect.

The doctrine, as a writing rule. The house may describe what a thing is, what is in it, where it came from, who made it and when. It may not describe what it will do to you.

Sounds like. Nineteen materials. Eleven of them you would not recognise.

Not. A fragrance that reveals your true self.

It is mechanically checkable, which is why it is first. Cover every verb that acts on the reader. If the sentence collapses, rewrite it.

Anchor 02

Name the material, not the mood.

Françoise speaks in origins, seasons and producers. That is the house register and also its proof. Mood words are available to every brand in the category at no cost, which is exactly what they are worth.

Sounds like. Vetiver from Haiti, distilled in September. Orris that sat four years before it was worth anything.

Not. Warm, woody, mysterious.

Anchor 03 • the joker word

Speak against the belief.

Iconoclastic won the voice exercise. Nizzar's definition, given in the room: someone or something that strongly opposes, attacks or rejects established beliefs. Françoise took it because it is what it is, because we are disruptive.

In practice. Every substantial thing the house publishes should contain one sentence the category would not say. Not an attack on a competitor. A refusal of a received idea.

Sounds like. Most perfume is a mask. We are not in that business.

Anchor 04

Every detail, addressed to one person.

Thoughtful was the first word Françoise reached for, and she explained it with an object rather than a feeling: they loved it because there was a card with their name in the package.

Always the singular. No our clients, no people like you, no segments. Commercially the house writes for one reader at a time, so it should write as though it knows which one.

Sounds like. You will sit with Françoise for three hours.
Not. Our clients enjoy an intimate consultation.

The two founders, and why both stay

FRANÇOISE

Concrete, material, hesitant in the best way. She reaches for an example rather than an adjective, and she refuses a claim she cannot stand behind. She is the voice of the work itself.

ANNA

Structural, fast, unafraid of a large claim, and willing to refuse a word in public. She is the voice of what the house believes and what it will not do.

THE HOUSE

Françoise's concreteness with Anna's spine. Never one without the other. Concreteness alone becomes a supplier. Conviction alone becomes the thing Françoise refused about Disney.

The test, read aloud

Read the sentence as though you were saying it to a client sitting opposite, who can afford anything and has heard every version of this pitch.

If you would be embarrassed, it is wrong. And the second test, which is this house's own: could a sceptic read it and say new crooks, new witches? Nizzar raised that risk himself. S1 01:07:05

Mechanics, and the words this house will not use.

Mechanics

- Short sentences. Fragments allowed and encouraged. Composed once. Yours.
- Contractions in speech and letters. Never on the object, where the register is formal because the object outlives the conversation.
- Numerals for facts, words for rhetoric. Formula 0041, nineteen materials. A number that can be checked is written as a number.
- No exclamation marks. Anywhere. The panther does not raise its voice.
- French material names stay in French. The house does not translate absolue, enfleurage, or a producer's own word for a harvest.
- Second person singular in every language that distinguishes it. In French, vous until the client says otherwise, then never back.
- Dates written in full. Seasons and years are the evidence, so they are never abbreviated.

One habit worth keeping

Both founders answer a question by narrowing it before they answer. That is the house's natural rhythm and it should survive into the writing: state the distinction, then answer the smaller question.

The lexicon

Left column banned outright. The replacement is sometimes silence, which is a legitimate answer.

NEVER	INSTEAD
Any verb that acts on the reader reveals, transforms, attracts, calms, balances, elevates, unlocks	Nothing. Rewrite the sentence so it describes the object rather than the reader. Anchor 01.
empowering, empower	Nothing. Decided in the session, and banned on every surface.
frequency, vibration, energy as properties of a product	The material and its origin. These words may be true in a founder's own mouth about her own life. They are not product copy.
bespoke	Composed for one person. The category word has been diluted past use.
luxury, luxurious	Silence. A house that says it is luxury is telling you it is not obvious.
olfactory journey, sensorial experience	The sitting. The reading. The bottle.
notes of	The material, its origin, its year.
signature scent	Your formula. It has a number.
curated	Chosen, and name who chose.
artisanal, handcrafted	Made by Françoise, in the atelier, on a date.
timeless, iconic	Delete. Timeless is a value the house holds and a word it does not use, because saying it forfeits it.
unisex	The house does not gender a formula, and does not describe one as ungendered either.
clean, free from, chemical-free	The material list. Belief six.
exclusive, limited	The actual number, or nothing.
giving back, impact, mission about ourselves	Co-created with, and the name of the community. Others may use the first set. The house may not.

THIS PAGE SETTLES the mechanics and the banned lexicon.

Three rewrites. The same information, twice.

The left column is not a straw man. It is the register this category actually writes in, and what a competent agency would deliver on a first pass. The right column is the same content put through the four anchors, and set in the house faces.

Before • the first screen of a site

Discover your signature scent. Our master perfumer crafts a bespoke olfactory journey that reveals the truest version of you, using the world's finest natural ingredients. Begin your transformation today.

Four breaches. It names an effect twice, it names no material, it explains the method, and it addresses a crowd.

AFTER • SET IN THE HOUSE SYSTEM

You already know what you want to be near.

Françoise will sit with you for three hours to find out what it is made of.

ONE READER • NO PROMISE OF CHANGE •
THREE HOURS IS THE ONLY CLAIM, AND IT CAN BE BROKEN

Before • replying to a first enquiry

Thank you so much for reaching out! We would love to welcome you into our world. Our bespoke experience starts at 12,000 euros and includes an exclusive consultation, a personalised fragrance profile and access to our private members' club. Spaces are limited, so do let us know soon!

Two exclamation marks, manufactured scarcity, and the club sold to somebody who has not commissioned anything.

AFTER

Thank you for writing.

A commission is 12,000 euros. That pays for a reading with Françoise, the materials, which are bought for you and sometimes for the first time, and between three and six trials until you recognise yourself in it. She composes eleven a year. The next sitting is in March.

If you would like it, tell me one place you have been that you have not forgotten.

SCARCITY AS A PRODUCTION FACT • NO CLUB •
THE LAST LINE IS THE READING BEGINNING BEFORE THE INVOICE

Before • a delay

We sincerely apologise for the inconvenience. Due to unforeseen supply chain challenges, your order will be slightly delayed. We appreciate your patience and are committed to delivering an exceptional experience.

AFTER

The iris we are waiting on was harvested late. It will not be ready to work with until the second week of April, and using last year's would change the formula. Your bottle will reach you in May rather than March. Nothing else has changed.

NO APOLOGY, BECAUSE NONE IS OWED FOR A SEASON •
THE MATERIAL IS NAMED • THE ALTERNATIVE IS PRICED IN FORMULA, NOT IN TIME

Five words from the room, five rules for the eye.

Exercise 08 produced chic, bold, sleek, timeless and professional. Each of the five is translated below into a rule that can be applied by a designer who was not in the session, and every rule on pages that follow is derived from one of them.

01 • the joker

Chic

Typography carries the house. Ornament does not exist. No crest, no monogram in a wreath, no foil flourish. Nizzar defended the word against elegant because in chic you are ballsy. You need to be strong to be chic.

And he chose it because it is not galvanised, not overused, and French international.

02

Bold

One thing per surface, at a size that is slightly uncomfortable. A single line of the display face, or the ripple at full scale, and nothing competing with it.

Bold is a size decision here, never a colour decision. Anna: bold will not be too much of colours.

03

Sleek

Nothing decorative survives. Every element on a surface has to report something: a number, a date, an origin, a position. If it reports nothing, it comes off.

This is the rule that keeps the ripple honest. page 40.

04

Timeless

Undated, not antique. No trend, and equally no period pastiche: the house was founded now and does not pretend to 1780.

Nizzar on why it is necessary rather than nice: when you are timeless, you insinuate that you are here to stay.

05

Professional

The laboratory is visible. Formula numbers, harvest years, composition dates, batch references, tabular figures. A monospaced layer running through everything.

Nizzar accepted the word on exactly these grounds: professional sounded to my perception as laboratory. But it is necessary in what we are doing.

Two further rules, from elsewhere in the sessions

The object is shown. The person is not. A face on a surface is a face the viewer is invited to become, and the house sells the opposite. Photograph the bottle, the material, the register, the hands at work. Never a model. page 42.

One accent per surface. A page, a label or a screen carries one coloured element and no more. An accent that appears twice has become a pattern, and a pattern is decoration, which chic has already thrown out.

What these rule out immediately

- NO Black and gold. The category default, and it says money rather than attention.
- NO A soft-focus photograph of a woman with her eyes closed.
- NO Botanical illustration. It belongs to the Innocent, which page 25 forbids.
- NO A wax seal, a crest, a rope-bound scroll.
- NO Gradients, glass, soft shadow. The visual language of software, applied to an object with weight.

The one departure, and why

The ground of this identity is  ivory, not cream. It is the one decision in this document taken outside the sessions, and it is taken deliberately.

Cream, oat and sand are the default surface of every natural and botanical brand on the shelf. A house whose whole position is that it does not cover people cannot afford to arrive wearing the category's own uniform.

Ivory reads as paper and bone. It is cooler, it is older, and it does not share a temperature with the materials, which are amber, brown and green. page 38.

Between three brands, and none of them is a perfume house.

Halfway through the aesthetics exercise Nizzar stopped and drew the position as a circle between three companies, then made both founders look the third one up. It is the most useful single instruction in Section III, because it is specific enough to brief a designer with.

The desire

Gucci

Chosen by both founders on the archetype board as the Lover. Quality is remembered long after price is forgotten.

What the house takes. The pricing conviction and the intimacy. Not the extravagance: Françoise named Gucci on the first day as the example of what Cartier is not. S1 00:37:08

The discretion

Cartier

Françoise's first answer of the first session. Sophistication, slow luxury, elegance without bling, everything in the materials.

What the house takes. The subdued register, the quality located in the material rather than in the volume, and the refusal to shout.

The proof

Oenobiol

A French nutraceutical brand, and the surprise of the exercise. Nizzar spelled it out letter by letter and made them both open the site.

What the house takes. The perception is that it is scientifically proved that this is not going to hurt me. There are people behind who are scientists. S2 01:23:35

Anna read the line off their homepage: proven efficiency. Which is the culture word from the exercise before it, arriving from outside.

The brief, in Nizzar's own words

We have to find a way to look like scientists that are high-end luxury.
Crazy scientists, in a funky way.

Nizzar Ben Chekroune • S2 01:24:00

That sentence does more work than any mood board. It rules out the two obvious routes at once. A house that is only Gucci and Cartier is another luxury perfume brand with better taste. A house that is only Oenobiol is a laboratory with a pretty bottle. The position is the overlap, and almost nobody is standing in it.

How it resolves the argument from ten minutes earlier. Anna had pushed for professional and Nizzar had refused it as a choice made from fear of the woo-woo corner. He then accepted it, because he had understood what she meant. The triangle is that acceptance made structural: the scientific half is not a defence against being seen as mystical. It is half of the product.

Every page that follows implements it. The palette is a card reading rendered in measured values. The type is a display serif over a grotesque over a laboratory monospace. The card that ships with the bottle is a laboratory fiche. The accord is built on a material that takes four years to become useful.

The two halves, side by side

LUXURY HALF	LABORATORY HALF
Ivory, brass, heavy glass	Tabular figures, batch numbers, dates
The display serif, used large	The monospace, used small
One accent, one statement	Origin, year, percentage
The sitting, three hours	The register, the retirement date
Chic	Professional

The ratio

Roughly two thirds luxury, one third laboratory, on every surface. Enough science that the claim is credible. Not so much that the object stops being desirable.

When in doubt, add the laboratory. The category's gravity pulls the other way.

THIS PAGE SETTLES the positioning reference: Gucci, Cartier and Oenobiol, and the ratio between them.

Six colours. Two of them were drawn from a card.

In the first ten minutes of the first session, before any exercise began, Françoise pulled a card for the house. Nobody treated it as a design brief. It is one, and it is the only colour direction either session produced.

S1 00:09:27 to 00:10:36

What the card said

The divine mediator. The link between earth and sky, the spine. The action of uniting and connecting, the discernment over pride and power.

And then, describing the card itself: it is radiance. A deep profound green, with a central ruby colour.

Anna: a dark green with a deep red ruby spot.

Vert profond

#2F4739

The material side. Origin, season, provenance, the sourcing line, the formula card's structure. A green that has been in a bottle rather than on a leaf.

Rubis

#7A2436

The single accent. One per surface, no more. Used where the house addresses one person directly, and nowhere else. The centre of the card.

Ivoire

#FBFAF6

The ground, and roughly eighty per cent of everything.

Encre

#201A16

Text, rules, the wordmark. A resinous brown-black, the colour of an aged absolute.

Cendre

#6E655C

Secondary text, captions, metadata. It replaces neutral grey, which does not exist here.

Laiton

#A8853F

Brass. A material, not an ink. The cap, the stamp, the edge of a card.

Measured, not assumed

Ratios calculated by the standard accessibility method. Thresholds: 4.5 for body text, 3.0 for large display and non-text elements. The permitted-use column is a rule, not a recommendation.

PAIR	RATIO	PERMITTED USE
● Encre on Ivoire	16.47	Everything. The default.
● Encre on Craie #FFFFFF	17.20	Everything. Evidence surfaces.
● Vert profond on Ivoire	9.66	Body text, headings, rules.
● Rubis on Ivoire	9.43	Body text, headings, the accent.
● Cendre on Ivoire	5.47	Secondary text. Never under 15px.
● Laiton foncé #7C6224 on Ivoire	5.54	Body text. The only way brass reaches type.
● Laiton on Ivoire	3.30	Large display and non-text only. No body copy, ever.
○ Ivoire on Encre	16.47	Text on the dark surface.

One finding worth keeping. Vert profond and Rubis land at 9.66 and 9.43 on ivory. The two colours the card produced carry, within three per cent, exactly the same optical weight. Neither can dominate the other, which is what the card said it was for.

Proportions

Ivoire 80. Encre 13. Cendre 4. Vert profond 2. Rubis 0.7. Laiton 0.3.

Deliberately unbalanced. An accent occupying more than one per cent of a surface has stopped being an accent, which is the one-accent rule expressed as a number.

Not in the system

Black, replaced everywhere by Encre. Neutral grey, replaced by Cendre. Gold as an ink: brass is a material and appears as one. And any seventh colour. If a surface needs one, the surface is wrong.

THIS PAGE SETTLES the palette, its roles, its measured limits and its proportions.

Three families. Two thirds chic, one third laboratory.

The triangle is a typographic brief before it is anything else. A display serif carries Gucci and Cartier. A monospace carries Oenobiol. A grotesque holds them apart. All three are free to licence, and every specimen below is set in the real face.

Display • large only • the chic

Instrument Serif

One weight and its italic. High contrast, a little sharp, contemporary rather than revived. It has the authority of a title page without the couture signal a Bodoni would carry.

Why it. The category reaches for a didone, which says Paris and a fashion house. This is neither. Having no bold is a feature: the only emphasis in the system is the italic, which is the Lover, and it cannot be overused because there is nothing else.

Rule: 24px and above. Never body text. If the licence fails: Newsreader, Spectral, EB Garamond.

Text and interface • the hinge

Instrument Sans

A neo-grotesque with slightly narrowed forms, drawn by the same foundry as the display face, which is why the pair sits without argument. This paragraph is set in it.

Rules. 16px minimum anywhere a client reads. 18px on the pages that explain a commission. Line length 60 to 72 characters. Leading 1.55.

Alternatives: Inter, Public Sans.

Evidence • the laboratory

Geist Mono

FORMULE 0041 • 19 MATIÈRES
COMPOSÉE 14 MARS 2027
IRIS PALLIDA • TOSCANE • 2022
VÉTIVER • HAÏTI • 2023

The monospace carries everything that proves something: numbers, dates, origins, harvest years, batch references, table headings. It is the Oenobiol third of the triangle, and the reason the house reads as scientific rather than mystical.

Rule. Tabular figures always. A column of numbers that does not align destroys a document's credibility faster than an error in it.

The hierarchy

LEVEL	FAMILY	TREATMENT
Section label	Geist Mono	Upper case, wide letterspacing, small, in Cendre.
Statement	Instrument Serif	Large, tight leading, italic for the single emphasised phrase.
Heading	Instrument Serif	Sentence case always. Title case belongs to another century of this category.
Body	Instrument Sans	Regular. Medium for the one phrase that carries the sentence. Bold does not appear.
Caption, data, label	Geist Mono	Small, tabular, Cendre or Vert profond.
Object engraving	Geist Mono	Upper case. The formula number and nothing else.

The ratio, applied. On any surface, count the elements. Roughly two thirds should be in the serif and the sans, one third in the monospace. If the monospace has disappeared, the laboratory has gone with it and only the perfume brand is left.

THE WORDMARK

rapp & esen

INSTRUMENT SERIF • LOWER CASE •
NATURAL SPACING • NO MODIFICATION

Set in the display face, lower case, at its natural spacing, with optical correction of the first and last pair only. No custom drawing, no invented ligature, no monogram.

A house whose mark is its name set well is confident.

THIS PAGE SETTLES the three families, the hierarchy and the wordmark.

The ripple. The one device the house owns.

Every identity needs exactly one recognisable move. Everything else should be restraint, which is not ownable and does not need to be. This one was proposed in the room, recognised instantly by the founder who had been thinking about it for eighteen months, and it is running down the outer margin of every page of this document.

An idea of iconography, maybe the logo, maybe the bottle, I have no idea. But you know when you have a teardrop on the water, it has a ripple. I picture a drop in the water that has this effect of expansion in the ocean.

NIZZAR BEN CHEKROUNE • S1 01:26:06

Anna answered before he had finished, with the version she had already recorded as a podcast episode: Françoise is a drop and creates the ripple. Nizzar drops, creates a ripple. Anna drops, makes a ripple. What is the exception is when these different drops intersect. It goes bigger. It expands.

The rule that keeps it honest

Principle three on page 36 says nothing decorative survives. So the ripple never decorates. Its radius always reports something true.

SURFACE	WHAT THE RINGS REPORT
A printed document	Position. The drop starts small at the front and the rings widen to the last page. This document does it.
The website	Scroll position. The rings expand as the reader descends. No numbers, no percentage.
A commission's papers	Stage. Reading, sourcing, trials, composition, delivery. Five rings, filled one at a time.
The label and the lockup	Nothing. The drop appears alone, without rings, because the object is the drop and because concentric circles at that size read as a target. page 47.
The club	Intersection. Two or more overlapping ripples, and it is the only place the overlap is ever drawn.

Why it works. It is the arc and the axis in one drawing. It costs nothing to reproduce at any size. It survives being embossed, engraved, letterpressed or set in a single CSS rule. And it is water, which is what perfume actually is.

THIS PAGE SETTLES the one device, and the rule that its radius always reports something.

The mark, at three sizes

Construction

The drop is a filled circle in ● Laiton. Rings are concentric, unfilled, and each is set at roughly twice the diameter of the one inside it, with the stroke weight and opacity halving outward.

The threshold. Rings are permitted only where the outermost one leaves the surface. If every ring fits inside the frame, the drawing has become a target and the rings come off. In practice that means roughly 60mm and above.

Where it must not appear

Never behind text it would compete with.
Never in more than one place on a surface.
Never animated as a pulse, which turns a still thing into a heartbeat monitor and undoes the panther.

The object. One bottle, one card, one box.

A house that makes one thing per client should make one object, extremely well, and resist every opportunity to extend it. The whole physical system of the commission is three items, and two of them are paper.

The flacon

Heavy, flat-shouldered, clear glass. Clear because the liquid of a natural composition is a colour nobody chose: amber, olive, occasionally almost black. That colour is evidence, and coloured glass would hide the one part of the object the house did not design.

Brass cap, unlacquered, so it marks with handling. An object that records having been used belongs to the person using it. A lacquered cap that stays perfect belongs to the shop.

One size for the commission. No travel bottle, no discovery set, no smaller format at a lower price. The instinct behind that request is real and it is answered properly on page 50, with a different object.

The label

Craie white, the only reserved white in the system. Three lines in the monospace, centred, which is the single centred setting the house permits. The formula number, the client's name as she gives it, and the date of composition with the month in roman numerals, because a date that has to be read slowly is read.

Nothing describes the contents. No notes, no family, no adjective. The person wearing it knows what is in it, and nobody else is entitled to.

The drop is blind-embossed on the label, without rings. On the object, the object is the drop.

The box

Ivory board, uncoated, blind-embossed with the wordmark on the base rather than the lid. A client finds it when she turns the box over, which is a small private moment and exactly the register of the Lover.

Inside: the bottle and the card.
Nothing else. No tissue, no ribbon, no note thanking her for her order.

The house accord goes on the outer shipping sleeve and never on this box. page 43.

The card

The formula card, page 44. It is the second most important object the house makes and it costs the price of a sheet of paper.

Françoise named it herself, in the voice exercise, as the reason a client calls the house thoughtful. That is an unusual piece of luck: the artefact and the word for it arrived from the same person in the same sentence.

What is not made

- NO A personal formula in any object other than its bottle.
- NO A house fragrance sold in a bottle.
- NO Branded tote, notebook, card holder.
- NO A second bottle in a smaller size.

Candles and lighter objects are not on this list. They are permitted, under a rule that keeps them from becoming a lifestyle extension. page 50.

What is photographed, and what never is.

The object is shown and the person is not. That single rule removes most of the images this category produces, and what is left is more interesting than what was removed, because nobody else can shoot it.

Photograph

- YES The material, as it arrives. Root, resin, dried peel, a jar with a producer's handwriting on it. The house's best image category, and no competitor can shoot it, because nobody else buys this way.
- YES The bench. Bottles at working scale, a scale, a pipette, a stained notebook. Untidied. A photographed bench that has been styled is a photograph of a set.
- YES Hands. Françoise's hands, at work, doing something that is actually happening. Hands are the one part of a person the house may show, because they are doing rather than being.
- YES The object. One bottle, flat light, on ivory, at its actual size.
- YES Paper. The card, the register, the envelope. Photographed as documents are photographed in an archive: square on, evenly lit, no atmosphere.

Never photograph

- NO A model. Any face. A face is an instruction to become someone, and the house exists to say the opposite. This is the image rule that corresponds to fume, not perfume.
- NO A client, or a client's bottle. Even with permission, even beautifully.
- NO A field of lavender at golden hour. The stock image of the entire natural category. It shows a crop the house may not even buy.
- NO Liquid pouring, splashing or suspended. Advertising language from the 1990s, and it wastes a material that cost money.
- NO Anything generated. The house sells the claim that a person paid attention. A generated image is proof that nobody did, and one of them appearing in a feed would undo more than it saves.

The treatment

LIGHT	One source, daylight, from the side. Never a beauty light, never a ring, never a gel. Shadows are allowed to be dark and are not filled.
COLOUR	Shot on ivory, or on the surface the thing actually sits on. No colour grade. Naturals are brown, amber and green, and those colours are the point.
FRAMING	Square on, or straight down. No tilted three-quarter product angle. The reference is a catalogue, not a campaign.
CROP	Generous. The object small inside the frame, with the space around it left empty.
MOTION	Rare, long and fixed. A locked camera on a process that takes time. Nothing cuts faster than the thing being filmed. The panther does not hurry.

The one image to make first

Not the bottle. A single material, photographed with its label, its origin and its year set beside it in the monospace.

It states the whole proposition in one frame: this house knows where things come from, and will tell you. It costs an afternoon, and it repeats for every material in the cabinet, which gives the house a library nobody can copy without buying the same materials.

The one formula that repeats.

A perfume house that never smells of anything is a strange object. The resolution is already in the platform: the house is itself a subject, it can be read like any other, and it gets one formula. That formula repeats because there is one house, and it is never sold.

Where it appears, and where it must not

APPEARS ON	AT WHAT STRENGTH
The outer shipping sleeve	Perceptible on opening the courier box, gone within a week. The client meets the house before she meets her own bottle.
The atelier and the reading room	Low, and switched off before a reading begins.
The dinner	On the linen and nowhere else.
Correspondence on paper	Trace. Enough that an envelope is recognised before it is opened.

The technical rule that is easy to get wrong

The accord never touches the inner box, the card, or anything in contact with the flacon. A scented presentation box competing with the composition inside it is a genuine error, not a matter of taste: the client's first impression of her own formula would be of two perfumes arguing.

Outer sleeve yes. Inner box no. Write it into the packaging specification, because it is the kind of instruction that gets lost between a designer and a converter.

What it should be made of

A direction for Françoise, not a formula. The brief is that the accord should behave like the brand rather than describe it, and the triangle is the brief.

- Orris at the centre. The most patient material in perfumery: rhizomes dried for years before they are worth anything. Cool, powdery, faintly ivory. It is Cartier, and its cost is the point.
- Vetiver beneath it. Dry, rooted, long. It is the roots, in Anna's sense.
- A resin to close it. Labdanum or benzoin, dark and slightly sticky. It is Encre.

Cool, not warm. Dry, not sweet. Every house at this price reaches for warmth, because warmth is welcoming. This one should be recognisably restrained, in the same way its surface is ivory rather than cream.

Three things it is not

- NO Not a product. It is never bottled or sold, at any price, to anyone. A lighter object may be built beside it, and it is not this.
- NO Not named in copy. It is recognised, never announced.
- NO Not a base. No client formula is built on it. Every commission starts from nothing, which is the only way composed once stays true.

THIS PAGE SETTLES that the house has one accord, that it repeats, and that it is never sold.

The card. The promise, on one sheet of paper.

Françoise named this object in the voice exercise, as the reason a client would call the house thoughtful, before anyone had asked her to design anything. It is where three beliefs, one promise and one rule stop being opinions.

FORMULE

0041

Marguerite L.

LECTURE Paris, 9 & 10 janvier 2027

TÊTE	Bergamote · Calabre · 2026	11%
	Élémi · Philippines · 2025	3%
CŒUR	Iris pallida · Toscane · 2022	9%
	Rose de mai · Grasse · 2026	6%
	Osmanthus · Guilin · 2024	2%
FOND	Vétiver · Haïti · 2023	14%
	Labdanum · Andalousie · 2024	8%
	Benjoin · Siam · 2023	5%

+ 11 matières, liste complète au verso

19 MATIÈRES · COMPOSÉE LE 14 MARS 2027 · CLOSE LE 14 MARS 2027
CONTIENT LIMONÈNE, LINALOL, GÉRANIOL ·
DÉCLARATION AU VERSO

F. RAPP

What every element is doing

ELEMENT	WHICH PART OF THE PLATFORM IT PROVES
The number	The register. Quotable, sequential, and it means a client can be told exactly how many formulas preceded hers.
Her name, set large	The Lover, and the totem. A portrait carries the sitter's name, not the painter's title.
The dates of the reading	The reading happened, on days that can be named. Anchor 01 in physical form: a fact rather than an effect.
Material, origin, year	Belief four, in its only verifiable form. This is the column no other house at any price publishes.
The proportions	The Magician, held deliberately. Enough to prove the composition exists, not enough to reproduce it.
Closed the same day	The one-formula rule. It left the palette the day it was finished.
The allergen line	Belief six. Naturals carry allergens, and the house says so plainly rather than hiding it in a leaflet.
The signature	One person made this and is accountable. Printed signatures are not permitted. It is signed by hand or it is not on the card.

Why the card matters more than the website

It is the only object in the system a client will show to somebody else unprompted. It is small, it is beautiful, it contains a name and a set of places, and it says something about its owner that she would not say herself.

Door one is the whole acquisition strategy of this house, and this card is what actually opens it. Budget accordingly: letterpress or engraved, on the same ivory board as the box, and never reprinted for a client who lost hers without the register being checked first.

Written in French, read anywhere

The card stays in French regardless of the client's language, and the reverse carries the English. Material names, origins and the structure of a composition are French by convention in this craft, and translating them on the front would trade precision for convenience.

It is also the laboratory third of the triangle, made portable.

The audio message. The thing that already works.

Françoise sends the client a recorded message about what she found in her and why she chose each material. It exists, it has never been named, and it is the single reason the value proposition exercise produced the word it did.

When Françoise sends my fragrance, I know the connection to the lily and all these pieces that she already sent as an audio message. It gives me this feeling of connection.

ANNA ESEN • S2 01:26:31

And then, seven minutes later, asked what a client feels afterwards, she described the same thing again without noticing she was describing a mechanism rather than a mood.

I felt recognised for who I am, even beyond the way I could express myself.

ANNA ESEN • S2 01:34:25

Nizzar, over the top of it: she saw you. Françoise: Recognised. And I have goosebumps.

Why it is the most valuable thing in the service

Because it is the only part of the commission that delivers the promise in a form the client can keep, replay and quote, and because it is the one place where the Magician is allowed to speak. The composition cannot explain itself. The card proves the facts. The message is where a person is told what another person saw in her, by the person who saw it.

It is also completely unownable by a competitor. A house can copy a card. It cannot copy a nose describing what she found.

What it contains

- What Françoise noticed in the reading, said plainly and without flattery.
- Each principal material, where it came from, and why it is there.
- One thing that went wrong or was abandoned during the composition.
- Nothing about what the perfume will do.

Length is whatever it takes. Unscripted, in one take, in the language the client was read in. A rehearsed version would be worth less than no version.

What it must never become

- NO Content. It is never published, excerpted, transcribed or used as testimony, even with permission. Its entire power is that it was made for one person.
- NO A deliverable with a template. The moment it has a structure the client can detect, it becomes a service feature and stops being someone speaking.
- NO Delegated. If Françoise did not compose it, she cannot record it, and the commission has already failed a different rule.

The third proof

The card is the evidence. The register is the guarantee. The message is the reading made audible. Together they are why this house can refuse to name an effect and still be believed.

THIS PAGE SETTLES that the audio message is part of the commission, and that it is never published.

Rapp & Esen. Already decided, and quietly load-bearing.

The name predates this work. It is used throughout both recordings, by all three people, without anyone stopping to justify it. That is worth doing once, because the name has already made four decisions that the rest of the brand has to live with.

Decision 01

It is a signature

Two surnames, in the manner of an atelier or a practice. It says a specific person made this and is accountable for it, which is exactly the claim the card, the register and the audio message all make in other media.

Decision 02

It is two people

Nizzar ruled that a house has one soul with many expressions. A name carrying one founder would have put the other outside her own house on every label the company ever prints. This one does not.

Decision 03

The nose is first

Rapp before Esen. The order is not alphabetical and it is not neutral. It says the composition leads and the business follows, which is the same order as the spine on page 14.

Decision 04

It describes nothing

No category word, no promise, no mood. A surname cannot be wrong about a formula, which matters when the house composes nineteen different things a year.

What it costs

- It is long on a 40mm label. The label solves it by setting the wordmark small and centred, with the formula number carrying the weight. page 41.
- The ampersand needs deliberate setting. It is the only drawn element in the identity and it earns that place, because it is the part of the name that says there are two.
- If a founder leaves, the name does not. Every practice named for its partners carries this, and every one of them keeps the name. Decide now that it stays, in writing, while the question is theoretical.
- It will be misspelled. Esen, Essen, Eisen. Secure the misspellings as domains before anything is printed.

The two lines that go with it

Both came from the same session and they do different jobs. Neither is a strapline to be locked under the mark.

EXPRESS DIFFERENT. Public. Nizzar, S1 02:01:28. Used where the house has one line and one line only. It carries the Apple lineage deliberately, and the founders know it.

IT IS FUME RATHER THAN PERFUME. Internal, and for conversation. Nizzar, S1 02:09:43. The fastest explanation of the business a founder can give at a table.

THIS PAGE SETTLES what the name commits the house to. It does not propose alternatives, because there is no question open.

THE WORDMARK, AT ITS WORKING SIZE

rapp & esen

LOWER CASE • INSTRUMENT SERIF •
NO DESCRIPTOR • NO TAGLINE LOCKED
BENEATH

Still to be cleared

No trademark search has been run. Not in class 3, not in any jurisdiction. A surname pair is registrable and defensible, and it is not automatically free.

Do it before the label is printed, not before the site is built. The label is the thing that becomes expensive to change.

The lockup. A name set well, and one drop.

There is no symbol to design. The mark is the name in the display face and a single brass drop beside it. The rings belong to the ripple at display scale and never appear in the lockup, because concentric circles at mark size read as a target. Everything below is construction, so that a printer, an engraver and a developer produce the same object.

Construction

CLEAR SPACE	The cap height of the wordmark, on all four sides. Nothing crosses it, including the ripple. On the label the clear space is doubled, because the object is small and the eye needs the pause.
NO RINGS	The lockup carries the drop alone. Concentric rings at mark size read as a target, which page 40 forbids. The rings are the device at display scale, where the outer ones leave the surface. The two never meet.
DROP ALIGNMENT	Its centre sits on the wordmark's optical centre, not on its baseline. Its diameter is one third of the cap height.
GAP	Between drop and wordmark, one and a half times the width of the lower-case n.
MINIMUM	Horizontal lockup: 22mm wide in print, 110px on screen. Below that, the name alone.
COLOUR	Wordmark in ● Encre or ○ Ivoire only. Drop in ● Laiton, always, on every ground.

Never

- NO Set the name in any other face, or in capitals, or in small capitals.
- NO Letterspace it. It is set at natural spacing with optical correction of the first and last pair only.
- NO Put a descriptor under it. No maison de parfum, no Paris, no founding year.
- NO Lock a tagline beneath it. Express different is a line the house uses, not a part of the mark.
- NO Add rings to the lockup, at any size, on any surface.
- NO Animate the drop as a pulse. It is still, like the panther.
- NO Place the lockup over a photograph. It sits on ivory, on encre, or on the material itself.

Six things still need names, and a rule for naming them.

The house is named. Six objects inside it are not, and they will acquire names by accident if they are not given them on purpose. This page sets the rules and leaves the words to you.

THE OBJECT	THE RULE IT HAS TO OBEY
The commission	It must name the expensive part, which is the reading, and not the liquid. Whatever it is called becomes the pricing argument, because a client repeats the name when she explains the number to somebody else.
The register	Plain, and it should stay plain. Its authority comes from sounding like an accounting document rather than a relic. Anything ceremonial here undoes it.
The card	Same. It is what a laboratory produces, and the name should come from that half of the triangle.
The house accord	It is never sold and never announced, so the name exists only internally. It may therefore be the one indulgent word in the system.
The lighter line	It must not sound like a step toward the commission, or it becomes an entry tier and the Lover dies. It should sound like a different thing made by the same people.
The club	It must survive being printed nowhere. A name that only ever gets said out loud, between members, and never appears in a proposal.

OPEN six names. Rules above, words yours. page 54.

Five rules for all six

- 01 French or English, never a blend, and the same choice for all six.
- 02 No category word: parfum, scent, essence, aroma, olfactive, nose.
- 03 Sayable on a telephone and spelled correctly by the person who hears it.
- 04 Nothing that describes an effect. The ban on page 34 applies to names as hard as it applies to sentences.
- 05 It must survive the test on page 16: if another name in the system already contains it, it is a waste of a name.

The order to do them in

The commission first, because it is the only one a client says out loud before she has bought anything. Then the card and the register, because they are printed. The club last, because it does not exist yet and naming it early would make it a product.

One warning

Do not name all six in one sitting. Names produced in a batch sound like a batch, and the system will read as a product family rather than as a house that made several things.

The commission, read as an expression of the brand.

A commercial frame does not exist yet, and this page is not one. It is the shape the offer has to have for the platform to be true, with the numbers left as brackets. Where a number appears it is an illustration and it is marked.

The commission

The reading

What is bought. A reading with Françoise. Not a fragrance. The distinction is the pricing argument and it has to survive being said out loud on a telephone.

What it contains. The sitting. The sourcing, including materials bought for the first time. Three to six trials. The composition. One bottle, the card, the line in the register, and the audio message.

Priced for the reading, not for the liquid. That is why the number does not change with the size of the bottle, and why it is the same for a difficult client as for an easy one.

The relationship

The refill

What is bought. The same formula, remade. page 31 explains why this is not a breach of the promise but the proof of it.

Priced for the liquid. Materials and labour. The expensive part was paid for once and is never charged again, and saying so plainly is more persuasive than any loyalty scheme the house could invent.

One message, no reconsultation, no upsell. This should be the easiest transaction in the business. Every friction added to it is a tax on the house's best revenue.

The second subject

The establishment

What is bought. A composition read from a building rather than from a person. Hotels were named in the session.

Why it belongs. It passes the four-question test on page 28: read from one subject, composed once, signed by the nose, and describable without naming an effect.

Never quoted per litre. The reading is priced, the diffusion is supplied at cost plus, and the contract renews annually or the house stops supplying.

The service rules, which are where presence went

Anna proposed present as a culture word and Françoise correctly said it was a state of being rather than a description. page 16 promised it would come back here. These six rules are that word turned into things the house does.

- 01 The reading is not interrupted. No telephone in the room, no second appointment that day, no fixed end time. A sitting that ran over is a sitting that worked.
- 02 The house accord is off before a client arrives. A nose cannot read a person through her own house.
- 03 Nothing is proposed in the first hour. The client is listened to for longer than is comfortable, and the discomfort is the product.
- 04 One working day, always. Including when the answer is not ready. I do not know yet, I will know on Thursday is an answer.
- 05 Sourcing costs are returned if a commission is abandoned after materials were bought. The house keeps the materials, which it would have bought anyway.
- 06 The nose signs, and the nose speaks. By hand on the card, and in her own voice on the recording. If Françoise did not compose it, it does not ship.

The number that has to be true

Capacity. How many commissions can Françoise compose in a year while rule one holds? Whatever that number is, it is the house's only honest form of scarcity.

Publish it as a production fact and never as a device. She composes eleven a year is persuasive because it is checkable and because it is obviously a limit rather than a tactic.

Eleven is an illustration used throughout this document. Replace it with the real number before anything is published.

And the sentence that sets the price

Rimowa, named by Nizzar as the brand that does this well: we're expensive, we are.

S1 01:32:27

No justification, no apology, no comparison. The price is a fact about the house, in the same register as the capacity.

The lighter line. It smells good and we like it.

Françoise raised a more affordable line and immediately refused it, on the grounds that she will not make a promise she cannot keep. Nizzar agreed with the refusal and then dissolved the problem entirely, using her own favourite poet. This page is that resolution, and it is the most commercially useful twenty minutes in either session.

The objection

Françoise: we talked about having the bespoke and a line of products people could afford, some candles or some perfumes. And having the love perfumes, what people want. I don't want to make fake promises, because I know which essence could affect your frequency. But we don't know. There are so many parameters. S1 01:07:19

The resolution

Nizzar asked her which writer she trusts. She said Baudelaire. He then built the argument backwards from there.

Imagine if Baudelaire said, that is a beautiful perfume, it smells good, and I like it. Would that be enough for you to try it? Yes, because he comes with everything.

NIZZAR BEN CHEKROUNE • S1 01:10:07

And then the instruction, which is the whole page:

If you create some products, because strategically it is smart for the brand to strive, you can sell it with no promise. It smells good and we like it. Before you can afford the rest, you can join the family through something that is lighter, that has no big promise. It only has one thing. We like it.

NIZZAR BEN CHEKROUNE • S1 01:10:07

Why it works. The fake promise Françoise feared was never in the product. It was in the sentence attached to it. Remove the sentence and the objection disappears, and what is left is a house whose taste is the entire proposition. It is the doctrine on page 11, applied to a candle.

The rules that keep it from becoming a lifestyle brand

- No promise, ever. It smells good and we like it. That is the entire copy permitted. No effect, no occasion, no mood, no ritual.
- It carries no personal formula. Never a client's composition in another object. page 31.
- It is not an entry tier. It is never described as a first step, a taste of, or a way in. The moment it is, the commission becomes the upsell and the Lover is finished.
- It is not personalised. Same object for everyone, which is what makes it honest next to a house built on one-of-one.
- Few, and slow. Two or three objects, changed rarely. A catalogue would make it the business.

What it solves

Anna's refusal to make anyone feel second class, and Françoise's refusal to make a claim she cannot stand behind, in one object. Those were the two founders' strongest personal positions and they looked incompatible for most of the first session.

It is also door two on page 30, and the only door the house can open by itself.

The watch item

This line will outsell the commissions, in units and possibly in revenue, within three years. That is not a failure. It becomes one on the day the house starts describing itself by it.

THIS PAGE SETTLES that a lighter line is permitted, and that it may carry no promise at all.

Nine numbers. None of them is reach.

A house with eleven commissions a year cannot be run on the instruments the marketing industry sells. Every number below can be counted by hand in an afternoon, and each one checks a specific claim made earlier in this document.

MEASURE	READS WELL AT	WHAT IT CHECKS
Share of commissions from door one	Above 70% by year two	That referral is the channel and no acquisition programme is needed. page 30.
Refill rate at eighteen months	Above 60%	The commercial engine. A low rate means the reading was wrong, not that the client moved on.
Trials per commission	Falling, year on year	That the nose's reading is improving. A flat line over three years means the process has stopped learning.
Weeks from first contact to the sitting	Long, and published	Capacity as a production fact. If it is short, the house is not at capacity and should say so rather than pretend.
Establishment contracts renewed	Above 80%	Door three. A hotel that does not renew was sold an amenity, which means the reframe failed.
Hours worked per person per week	Falling as revenue rises	The efficiency value, and the only external audit of it. Both rising together means the value has been abandoned.
Refusals recorded	More than zero, every quarter	A quarter with no written refusals means nothing was tested, or something was accepted and not written down.
Guests brought to a dinner by a member	Rising, unprompted	The only signal the club works, and it must never be solicited. page 32.
Third-party mentions of the Amazon work	Rising, none of them ours	That the giving-back rule is holding. If the house is the source, the rule has already broken.

What the house deliberately does not measure

- NO Followers, impressions, reach, engagement. The house sells eleven things a year to people who are not reached by advertising. Measuring an audience it does not need will eventually cause it to build one.
- NO Email list size. The same failure with a longer delay.
- NO Press mentions. Pleasant, and not a signal. The trend-piece trap is already named under the visionary value.
- NO Conversion rate on the site. There is no conversion on the site. There is an enquiry, and then there is a person.

Each becomes tempting in a slow quarter, and each is a proxy for the thing that is actually slow. The nine numbers above tell you which one.

The one to read first

The refill rate. It is the only number that reports on the quality of the reading rather than on the quality of the selling, and the reading is the whole product.

A client who does not come back for a second bottle of her own perfume was not read correctly. That is uncomfortable, unambiguous, and worth more than every other number on this page put together.

Ninety days. Label first, website last.

The order matters more than the speed. The label is the hardest constraint in the system, and anything that survives it survives a screen. A house that builds its website first will design a system that fails at forty millimetres, which is the size the client actually holds.

DAYS	WHAT IS DONE	OWNER	WHY IT COMES HERE AND NOT LATER
01 • 30	Close the decisions on the last page.	Both	Nothing downstream can be built on brackets. It is one afternoon, not a project.
	Set the real capacity number.	Françoise	It sets the price, the waiting time and the scarcity language. Everything commercial waits on it.
	Trademark search, class 3.	Anna	Before a single thing is printed. Secure the misspellings of Esen at the same time.
	Open the register and the refusal log.	Both	Both are cheap now and impossible to reconstruct later. The register must start at the first commission or its numbering is a fiction.
	Write the packaging note about the accord.	Françoise	Outer sleeve yes, inner box no. It gets lost between a designer and a converter if it is not written down first.
31 • 60	Set the wordmark and draw the drop.	Both	An afternoon of typesetting and one circle. Nothing is invented.
	The label is designed and printed.	Anna	The first real test of the whole system. If the label works, the rest follows from it.
	The card is specified and proofed.	Both	The most valuable object after the perfume, and it needs a hand signature, which means a real proof on real board.
	The material photography begins.	Françoise	One material, one afternoon, repeated. The library compounds and no competitor can copy it without buying the same materials.
	Record one audio message properly.	Françoise	It already happens. Doing it once deliberately establishes what good looks like before there are ten a year.
61 • 90	One page. Not a website.	Anna	The house sells eleven things a year through referral. A single page that states the proposition and opens an enquiry is the correct size.
	The first dinner. Eight people.	Both	The cheapest version of the club that is still true, and the only honest way to find out whether it exists.
	One establishment conversation.	Anna	Not to close it. To find out whether the reframe holds when somebody asks for a price per litre.
	Write the commercial frame.	Both	Prices, formulas, terms, capacity, and the lighter line. It can only be written once the decisions above are closed.

What is deliberately not in the first ninety days

No social accounts. No press. No launch. No investor conversation. No brand film. No lighter line. Each is an answer to the question how do we become known, and this house does not have that question yet. It has a capacity and a referral mechanism.

If the first three commissions arrive and each brings a referral, the house has proved its model and can spend the second ninety days on anything it likes. If they do not, nothing on that list would have helped.

The single gate

Do not print the label until the name is cleared, and do not clear the name until the decisions are closed.

Everything else here can run in any order or slip by a month without cost. That one sequence cannot.

The verbatims, in the order they were said.

Thirty lines, from two sessions, each traceable to its mark. Spelling is lightly cleaned and nothing is paraphrased. Words the house has since banned appear here as they were spoken. s1 is 17 September, s2 is 18 September.

MARK	SAID
S1 00:09:43 Françoise	It is the action of uniting and connecting, the discernment over pride and power. A deep profound green, with a central ruby colour.
S1 00:27:54 Nizzar	The brand already exists. It is already there. But it needs to come from you.
S1 00:47:11 Nizzar	It is the brand who sees you and says, I recognize you. And now you are part of the family.
S1 00:48:24 Nizzar	You cannot have as a value forever and also a movement. That quantum ambivalence is something we will have to work on.
S1 00:51:58 Nizzar	You are not for everybody. It does not mean we do not like the others. It only means that we are not for everybody.
S1 00:59:03 Nizzar • Françoise	We are giving them a totem for becoming. / Yeah, a talisman.
S1 01:01:26 Nizzar	The impact is the aftermath. You never sell the aftermath. You sell the truth.
S1 01:03:01 Nizzar	If we sell the impact, we become sellers. People think we are selling something to them.
S1 01:05:18 Nizzar	There is a syndrome of being left behind. It is deeper, it is even more vicious, because it is not a fear. It is a syndrome.
S1 01:07:19 Françoise	I don't want to make fake promises, because there are so many parameters.
S1 01:10:07 Nizzar	You can sell it with no promise. It smells good and we like it.
S1 01:13:09 Nizzar	What the right hand gives, the left hand does not know. You do not scream it out loud. If we give back, people will say it.
S1 01:19:59 Nizzar	From Patagonia to McDonald's, what I hear you say is I care.

MARK	SAID
S1 01:25:41 Anna	They know that when they are on this negotiation table, they will never ask the question, why do you care?
S1 01:26:06 Nizzar	You know when you have a teardrop on the water, it has a ripple. So the perfume has some kind of watery thing.
S1 01:29:50 Anna	I love luxury and eliteness, but in a way that I don't want others to feel excluded like a second class.
S1 01:46:52 Anna	They are absolutely still. But the moment they need to act, it is from zero to a hundred.
S1 02:01:00 Nizzar • Françoise	Can you hear the brand talking through you now? / Essence? Rose? Forever?
S1 02:01:28 Nizzar	One of the directions we are going is like express different. And the expression is the expression of your essence.
S1 02:04:25 Nizzar	Transcendence at the high level, transformation at the low level. And everything in between is life.
S1 02:09:43 Nizzar	They are covering your essence instead of revealing it. It is fume rather than perfume.
S1 02:11:13 Françoise	I see something that says, it is going to happen anyways. And it is coherent with the perfume.
S1 02:15:51 Anna	Truth always wins in a magical way.
S1 02:32:04 Anna	He is defiant without movement.
S1 02:36:01 Anna	We are not building something beautiful. It will be beautiful by design.
S1 02:44:27 Nizzar	You come to the brand with the self-centricity, but then you expand into the world-centricity.
S2 00:28:14 Nizzar	The fragrance is the entry to the club, but the club is not the subject. It is the impact.
S2 00:40:10 Anna	A woman doesn't need to be empowered. We have been sold the story of empowering as if we don't carry the power within ourselves.
S2 01:07:45 Nizzar	If I had to choose my client, would I choose him to be wealthy? No.
S2 01:10:26 Nizzar	Consideration has the weight of being grateful, respectful, and it has awareness. It is not just myself in the centre of everything.
S2 01:24:00 Nizzar	We have to find a way to look like scientists that are high-end luxury. Crazy scientists, in a funky way.

One entry on the archetype board of 18 September, the Caregiver, is not legible in the recording and its brand name is recorded as unknown.

Six decisions. All of them yours.

Everything else in this document is settled, derived, or proposed with its reasoning exposed. These six cannot be settled by a strategist, because each is a preference, a constraint or a fact only the two of you hold.

	THE DECISION	WHAT IS RECOMMENDED	WHAT IT UNBLOCKS
01	The real annual capacity. page 49	Whatever Françoise can compose while the reading is never interrupted. Eleven is an illustration used throughout this document and is almost certainly wrong.	The price, the waiting time, and the only form of scarcity the platform permits.
02	Six object names. page 48	The rules are set and the words are not proposed. Start with the commission, because it is the only one a client says out loud before she has bought anything.	The card, the register, the one page, and the commercial frame, all of which have to call things something.
03	Whether the lighter line runs, and what it is. page 50	Yes, but not in the first ninety days. Two or three objects, no promise, no personalisation, never described as a step toward a commission.	Door two, Anna's refusal to exclude anybody, and Françoise's refusal to promise anything. It is the only object that answers both.
04	The club's mechanic. page 32	Anna described a yearly membership carried inside the client relationship. Confirm it, and keep it out of every proposal.	The dinner, the guest rule, and how the club is paid for without being pitched.
05	What happens to a formula when its owner dies. page 31	It passes with the estate and can be refilled by whoever holds it. It is still never composed for anyone else.	The terms of a commission, and a conversation that will otherwise happen for the first time in the worst possible circumstances.
06	Section III as written. voice and the visual system	Accept, or amend in place. None of it is a guess: every rule traces to a word from Exercise 07, 08 or 09, or to the triangle.	Everything in the ninety days. Nothing can be designed while the expression is provisional.

What happens after they are closed

The platform is signed and stops moving. Observe and Collapse are finished, and The Collapse moves to Build: the mark, the label, the card, the one page, the commercial frame. Hold begins at the first commission and is a quarterly conversation against this document, not against the market.

The test of whether this was worth doing is not whether you like it. It is whether, in eighteen months, one of you refuses something profitable and can point at a page.

We are not building something beautiful. It will be beautiful by design.

ANNA ESEN • S1 02:36:01

The one thing to protect

Not the name, not the palette, not the club.

Nine exercises across two days, run separately and on different material, arrived at one instruction: do not add anything to the person. The Magician reveals rather than transforms. The Lover is turned inward. The culture refused the one word that promised to add power. The client is chosen for already having it. And the anti-brand is covering rather than revealing.

Every other decision here can be reversed without damage. That one is the house, and it is also the only thing the category makes expensive to keep.

Rapp & Esen • brand platform v1.0
Prepared by Quantum Branding under The Collapse
Observe, Collapse, Build, Hold
Sessions of 17 and 18 September 2026